• OLD FOLKS. Ah. don't be sourowful, darling, And don't be sorrowful, pray; Taking the year together, my dear, There isn't more night than day!

'Tis rainy weather, my darling, Time's waves they heavily run, But taking the year together, my dear, There isn't more cloud than sun!

We are old tolks now, my darling, Our heads are growing gray; But taking the year all round, my dear, You will always find the May!

We have had our May, my darling, And our roses long ago, And the time of year is coming, my dear, For the silent night and the snow!

And God is God, my darling, Of night as well as of day; We feel and know that we can go Wherever He leads the way.

Ah, God of the night, my darling, Of the night of death so grim; The gate that leads out of life, good wife, Is the gate that leads to Him.

SOWING ON THE WATERS. Think not God can forget; Trust in his righteousness—be still and wait.

What if he linger yet? Thou know'st not what with him is soon or late.

He counts not hours with thee, No sun metes out for him a daily round; His time—Eternity!

Death is no mark for Him, the grave no bound.

THE EMPEROR CONSTANTINE. Dr. Stanley, in his "Lectures on the Eastern Church," thus graphically refers to the personal appearance and character of the first Christian Emperor: "Handsome, tall, stout, broadshouldered, he was a high specimen of one of the coarse military chiefs of the declining empire. When Eusebius first saw him, as a young man on a journey through Palestine before his accession, all were struck by the sturdy health and vigor of his frame; and Eusebius perpetually recurs to it, and maintains that it lasted to the end of his life. In his latter days, his red complexion and bloated appearance gave countenance to the belief that he had been affected with the leprosy. His eye was remarkable for brightness, almost a glare, which reminded his courtiers of that of a lion. He had a contemptuous habit of throwing back his head, which, by bringing out the full proportions of his thick neck, procured for him the nickname Trachala. His voice was remarkable for its softness and gentleness.— In dress and outward demeanor, the military leader was almost lost in the vanity and affectation of Oriental splendor. The spear of the soldier was almost always in his hand, and on his head he always wore a and on his head he always wore a small helmet. But the helmet was studded with jewels, and it was bound round with the Oriental diadem which he first of the Empedem, which he, first of the Emperors, made a practice of wearing on all occasions. His robe was remarkwas always of the imperial purple or scarlet, and was made of silk, richly embroidered with pearls and flowers worked in gold. He was established by the scarlet and sold the public that he has leased the NEW STEAN MILL at Waynesburg, Pa., where ke will always be found ready to accommodate all who may call on the shortest notice. Grinding done on the same terms as flowers worked in gold. He was established by the constantly on hand. Orders for either can be left at the Millor at Various story. 1862 ed for its unusual magnificence. It pecially devoted to the care of his hair, ultimately adopting wigs of false hair of various colors, and in such profusion as to make a marked short beard. "He was not a great man, but he was by no means an ordinary man. Calculating and shrewd as he was, yet his worldly views were penetrated by a vein of religious sentiment, almost of Oriental superstition. He had a view of his difficult position as the ruler of a divided empire and divided Church. He had a short, dry humor, which stamps his sayings with an unmistakable authenticity, and gives an insight into the cynical contempt of mankind, which he is said to have combined, by a curious yet not uncommon union, with an inordinate love of praise. He had a presence of mind which was never thrown off its guard. He had the capacity of throwing himself, with almost fanatical energy, into whatever cause came before him for the moment. One instance, at least, showed of consummate foresight and genius.

feature on his coins. First of the Emperors since Hadrian, he wore a

"We have seen from his dress, and we see also from his language, that be was not without the wretched affectation which disfigured the demeanor of the later Emperors .-Against one great old Roman vice, that of voracious gluttony, he struggled, but struggled in vain. The Christian accounts all speak of his continence. Julian alone iusinuates the contrary. It was only as despo-tic power and Eastern manners made inroads into the original self-control of his character, that he was betrayed into that disregard of human life in his nearest and dearest relationships, which, from the same causes, darkened the declining years of the Grecian Alexander and the English Henry."
