Boy again I seem'd to come.

He to whom you taught me, mother, On my infant knee to pray, Kept my heart from fainting, mother, When the vision passed away.

In the gray of morning, mother, Comrades bore me to the town: From my bosom tender fingers Wash'd the blood that trickled down. I must soon be going, mother,

Going to the home of rest: Kies me as of old, my mother, Press me nearer to your breast. Would I could repay you, mother, For your faithful love and care: God uphold and bless you, mother, In this bitter woe you bear.

Kies for me my little brother, Kiss my sisters, loved so well: When you sit together, mother, Tell them how their brother fell. Tell to them the story, mother, When I sleep beneath the sod, That I died to save my country All from love to her and God.

Leaning on the merit, mother, Of the ONE who died for all, Peace is in my bosom, mother,-Hark! I hear the angels call! Don't you hear them singing, mother? Listen to the music's swell! Now I leave you, loving mother-God be with you-fare you well.

THE PLACE TO DIE. Home should be the first word on this subject. The thought of that spot brings in every heart at the question, for no feeling is more common than a desire to die at home. "Let thy servant, I pray thee, turn back again, that I may die in my own city; and be buried by the graves of my father and mother."— How many times has this prayer been offered. So universally is this desire felt and acknowledged, that the words "he died among strangers!" go straight as an arrow to the heart. You cannot withstand the simple appeal to your sympathy. God used this desire of the heart when He said to a disobedient people, "And I shall cast you out into another country, where ye were not born, and there shall ye die."

To die at home! It is the thought to-day of a thousand hearts among the sick and wounded soldiers of our armies. Some of these, we are persuaded, are now turning from the close, warm, hospitals, or the soldier's tent, to the beautiful country, and longing for the sight of their native hills, for the old familiar home, with its pleasant faces and loving hearts, for the country church-yard with its white marble and green mounds, its quiet and rest.

"Comrade, I am going to die!" said a poor soldier in Virginia, the other day. "Can I be taken home?" Poor heart! How pitiful this last struggle for earthly comfort. The same old story—let me die at home -but with the old, touching interest. Home! the last point on the receding shore to which the dying eye has turned.

The place to die becomes a near question to us when, as all naturetree, bud, and blossom-has come forth with a new and perfect life, we are called on to lay under the green turf wany of our friends who have died from home. Then we are so often called upon to place our flags at half-mast, when the Dead March has become so familiar a sound, when soldiers with measured tread and arms reversed so often meet the eye, we must think of the place to die.

"There is no place like home to die," said a student, who had come home sick.

Young friend, you do well to love your home. There is nothing like it to keep the heart pure. You touch a cord which quivers when you speak to a stranger about the bitterness of dying from home. But there may be a better place than home to die.-Ruth thought so when urged to return to her own country and kindred. "Where thou diest I will die, and there will I be buried." Thomas thought so when he said to his brother disciples, as their Master was called to meet danger, "Let us go, that we may die with Him." Samson found a better place than home: "And Samson said: 'Let me die with the Philistines!' and he bowed himself with all his might; and the house fell upon the lords, and upon all the people that were therein. So the dead that he slew in his death were more than, they which he slew in his life." Regulus chose his place to die among his enemies. When Thomas Drummond said: "Tell my brethren for me that I died at my post," do you doubt, kind reader, that he found the right place to die?— Yes' indeed—and I trust the words
