"A LETTER FROM HOME."

BY C. HENRY ST. JOHN. Some were sitting—some were standing-Some were fishing in the lake;

Some were sound asleep and dreaming: Some were dreaming wide awake; Some were patching up their tatters; Some were polishing their guns; Some were reading ragged letters, Some were popping sorry puns. Each was using his endeavor

Thus to pass the time away; All were anxious, all were ready, All were sighing for the "fray," When soon there came a murmur, Like the rising of a gale-/Corporal Jones has got a letter From his sister, by the mail?"

"A letter, boys! a letter!', And each man was on his feet: "Corporal Jones has got a letter!" How we scampered up the "street!" A letter from New England! 'Twas an angel from the skies Some came with eager questions,

Let us hear it—every word"— Yet nothing but the crackle Of the paper could be heard; But that alone was music, And no sweeter seemed to be-For it brought the leafy rustle

Of our dear old trysting-tree!

Not a few with tearful eyes.

With frequent interruption Does he read it line by line-How the corn-crop is progressing. And how flourishes the vine. Then all that father's doing, And something mother said, How Sally Brown is wedded, And Mary Smith is dead.

Too soon the sheet is ended, How very brief it seems! But it sets us long a-talking. And is lengthma out sur decous. For our feet in fancy wander Ofer the hills we know so well. And we linger 'neath the roof-tree Where our heart affection dwell!

Oh, ye who may not shoulded A musket in the strife-Each mother, daughter, sister, Each matron, maiden, wife-Let every gale come faden With the perfume of your love, And spirits faint and drooping Twill to deeds of valor move
