Peace and harmony might reign;

Then soldiers could come home again. The battle field they then would leave, And kindred friends no longer grieve. Think of the thousands already slain: Q midiers l do come home again.

The soldier, then, would meet his wife At kindred friend's for term of life; What harmony would then remain, If soldiers could come come again!

Let North and South together meet, And on some terms of reason treat, Then sheathe their sword that's many slain, Post soldiers could come home again.

Let Narth and South a little bend, Committee their reason as a friend, From apilling blood, Oh, do refrain! Let soldiers all come home again.

If Abolition takes the field, We to mostgchs soon must yield; Their glittering sword with blood they'll stain; Poor soldiers can't come home again.

If I could like a lawyer plead, The South I'd meet and tell our need, That friendship should with us remain That soldiers could go home again.

If with the above all will comply, Our troops of horse to home will fly, footmen shout with loudest strain. Thank God! we're going home again.
