LITTLE WIFE.

BY GEORGE COOPEB. I care not for the rising storm, I do not heed the co'd, Nor listen to the angry wind That roars around the world. I only know my journey's o'er, For just ahead I see The light that tells my little wife Is waiting there for me.

My gentle wife! my darling wife! My soul's own joy and pride! Ten thousand blessings on the day When you became my bride. I've never known a weary hour Since I have held your hand-I would not change my worldly lot For any in the land.

Oh sweetly from her loving lips, The blissful welcome falls! There is no happiness for me Outside our humble walls. Ah! sad indeed would be my heart, And dark the world would be If not for this dear, little wife That ever waits for me.

Don't WANT ANY MORE,-A pri vate in one of the New Hampshire regiments, now with the army of the Potomae, writes home that he now has two pair of shoes, six pairs of stockings, five pair of drawers, four pairs of shirts, three pair of DRY GOODS pants, five coats, two caps, one hat, one pair of gloves, and three blankets, and concludes his letter with the very modest request to "send no more at present."
