A TRAGIC BEAR FIGHT.

The following terrible encounter with a bear occurred in Lower Canada. The particulars are translateded from the Canadian :

"A most painful occurance has spread a panic in the parish of St. Raymond. A man has been torn to pieces by a bear. The bear killed and carried off over night a cow belonging to a man of the name of Michael Cantin. On the morrow an experienced hunter in that region, named James Cantin, whose him for forty years had brought down bears, moose and other large game of the forest, without number, prepared means to put an end to this ferocious brute. It was sundown before these were completed, and he had not time to go for his son to assist him in the hunt. The bear came according to custom, to feed upon the prey he had secreted; and the inhabitants of the village heard the firing of a gun. Fifteen minutes later another gun was heard, the report sounding as if near the woods; and, as the night was closing, a third report was heard coming from within the forest; then all was silent.

The people guthered together to meet the hunter on his way home, end hear from his own lips the story of his encounter with the bear. But the night has begun, and he does not come. The hopes of his friends turn to fear, and they resolve to fly to his assistance. They start with lanterns, and proceed to the edge of the forest, where their cries and discharge of fire-arms remained unanswered. They enter the woods and scour it in various directions, but without seeing or hearing anymorning.

More than forty persons, who had been summoned in the course of the night, met at davbreak on the morrow at the spot whence. the report of the hunter's first shot proceeded. A bloody truck led them on through the forest : and many who were following it came to the bear, which they found lying dead in a clump of bushes near a swamp. But no ic blow doubtless threw Cantin to the ground, when the bear left him and retreated to die a few rods from the scene of the conflict.

was found with clasped hands, and holding his blue bonnet. Honest and strictly pious, the last thoughts of that unfortunate man were worthy of his whole life. He leaves a disconsolute widow and four children to lament his untimely and awful end.

That Word-No.

No !- This is a very short word. It has very short meaning sometimes. It often blasts fond anticipations ; it may charge the whole tenor of a life. In matrimonial matters it would be better that it should be oftener said than it is, for many of that sex sometime say No when they mean YEs, and should use the shorter word when they do not.

One Sunday evening, not many nights ago, the Rev. Tompson preformed a marriage ceremony at the Tabernaclu - both parties said YEs at the proper time, and the reverend gentleman said amen.

" [ want you to perform the same thing for me," said a well-dressed, youngish man, to Mr. Tompson. When;'

" Now-right off-to-night."

"Can't you put it off a little ? It will make it rather late." "No-the lady says now or never, and I am very anxious. Will you go ?"

"Yes ; where is it ?" "Close by-only a few steps west of the Park. We are all ready, and will not detain you but a few minutes on your way home." Mr. T. went to the place, which was a respectable bording house, and everything evinced decorum. The lady, young and pretty neatly dressed, and altogether a desirable partner for the gentleman-was presented, and a short prayer, as usual upon such occasions, offered, and then hands joined.

"You, with a full sense of the obligations you assume, do promise, here in the presence of God and these witnesses, that you will thing. Then they return home, sad and dis. take this woman, whose right hand you pirited, to resume the search at dawn next clasp in yours, to be your lawful wedded wife, and as such you will love and cherish her forever ?"

". I do."

"And you, Miss, on your part, will you ake this man to be your lawful, wedded husband ?"

" NO !"

We have heard in times past, when showers were fushionable, some pretty heavy hunter was to be found. They continued on claps of thunder ; but none that ever rattled the ground, which extended beyond the spot about the tympanum of that bridegroom was where lay the animal, until in the midst of a quite so loud as that stuaning little monosyldings, Battings, Wickings, Alexings, Drinings, Wad-dings, Battings, Wickings, Vestings, Cravats, Stocks, is No, I never will !" said she most em- Collars, Handkerchiefs, Cambricks, Laces, Trimnate Cantin. dense thicket they slumbled on the uniority. the blood that had been shed ; and the mutilated limbs of the deceased, overything told of a long and desperate conflict waged hand to hand between the unfortunate hunter and his terrible adversary.

From all that could be gathered on the subpart, it is surmised that the horrible trogedy took place in the following manner: Cantin's first shot had wounded the bear severely and driven him to the woods. The hunter followed in pursuit, and fired a second time. but from the rear as in the first instance. Still, this could not have been a mortal wound. Then it is supposed that the bear finding he was followed up closely, and urged on by fear and rage, plunged deeper into the forest. where at length he laid down to recruit his strength, or perhaps to die after the custom of his species, the members of which usually seek some retired spot to breath their last. Accordingly, the monster selected the densest thicket to be found in the woods.

Animated by that noble ambition of the hunter who thinks he is sure of his game, and is desirous of adding another to his numerous expluits, Cantin persevered in the me ?" chase, notwithstanding the increasing darkuess around him.

Still it must have been sufficiently light for him to distinguish the gory track of the bear; his proposals-I accepted and said Yes, get but it is highly probable that he stumbled sud- the minister at once. The man and brute must have closed then in the last fearful conflict which terminated so fatally, and hav. ing nothing, but his stout arm to oppose the fury of the bear, the brave fellow's courage could not save him the tragic end he met with.

When the bear engages in a fight, he rises, and, sitting on his haunches, strikes his paws like a monkey, but uses his claws in addition like a cat; while his enormous muscles indicate a strength that it is almost inconceivable. His claws, projected with a terrible power, tear and carry away everything they fall upon. From these poor Cantin received several terrific blows making the blood run cold in the veins of those who looked upon his corpse. His hands were torn by the claws, and partly, devoured, by the animal's teeth. The hair of his head and scalp hung in pieces about his face, and his right thigh was mangled into mince meat, He must have been still contending against the bear, when the brute, wilb a fearful instinct, directing his blows against the man's head, fixed his murderous claws in his face, for by a blow of his right paw, he literally stripped off the hun.

"Yes; I certainly will, and so will all who know you."
