

Humorous Sketch
How a Quaker Collected a Debt.

Near the close of the last century, a Quaker, knight of the shears and thimble, who exercised his avocation in Philadelphia, was impudently upon by an adroit ecroual, who contrived to get a suit of clothes on credit, and afterwards eloped without paying. The Quaker was too poor to lose the debt, but like too many others of his cloth, he had apparently no other alternative. The account was placed on his books and soon forgotten.

Some years afterward, he was examining his old record of debt and credit, profit and loss, when his attention was attracted to this account, and all the circumstances attending it came fresh to his mind. Suddenly an odd thought suggested itself to him.

"I'll try an experiment," said he to himself, "perhaps I may succeed in catching the rogue and getting my pay."

He immediately prepared an advertisement in the following words, which he inserted in the Philadelphia Gazette:

"If J. C. who was in Philadelphia about the month of _____, in the year 1795, will send his address to the editor of this paper, he will hear something to advantage. Papers in neighboring States are requested to copy."

The latter clause was inserted from a vague suspicion that the rogue had taken up his abode in New York. Having instructed the editor not to disclose his name to the rogue if he should call, but to request the latter to leave his address, the Quaker patiently awaited the result of his experiment.

In a short time he was informed by a note from the editor that the individual alluded to in the advertisement, having arrived from New York, might be found at a given place in the city. The tailor lost no time in preparing a transcript of his account, nor forgetting interest from the time the debt was contracted. Taking a constable with him, who bore a legal process issued to the occasion, he soon arrived at the lodgings of the swindler. The Quaker now rang the bell, and when the servant appeared, requested him to inform the gentleman of whom he was in search, that a friend wished to speak with him at the door. The man obeyed the summons, and soon both debtor and creditor were looking each other in the face.

"How dost thou do?" kindly asked the Quaker. "Perhaps thou dost not know me." "I believe I have not had the pleasure of your acquaintance," coolly but politely answered our hero.

"Dost thou remember purchasing a suit of clothes several years ago of a poor tailor and forgetting to pay for them?" asked the Quaker. "Oh, no," said the gentleman, blushing slightly, "you must be mistaken in the person. It cannot be me that you wish to find."

"Oh, John! I know thee very well. Thou hast on at this very moment the waistcoat I made for thee. Thou must acknowledge it was of good stuff and well made, or it could not have lasted thee so long."

"Oh, yes," said the gentleman, appearing suddenly to collect himself; "I do remember the circumstances to which you allude. Yes—yes—I had intended to call and settle that bill before leaving Philadelphia, and you may depend on my doing so. I have come here to take possession of a large amount of property which has fallen to me by will. See, here is the advertisement that apprised me of my good fortune."

Here he handed the Quaker a New-York paper containing a copy of the advertisement the history of which we have given above. The Quaker looked at him with imperturbable gravity, and said:—

"Yes, I see thou art in luck; but as my demand is a small one, I think I must insist on its payment before thou comest into possession of thy large estate."

The proper signal here brought the constable into the presence of the parties. The swindler was particularly astonished at the appearance of that functionary, who immediately began to execute his part of the drama.

"What!" exclaimed the rogue in an angry tone, "you surely have not sued me?" "Yes, I have," replied the Quaker, "and thou shouldst be thankful that nothing worse has happened to thee."

"Come into my house," said the debtor, fidgeting himself fairly caught; "come in, and I will pay you if I must."

The three went into the house together, and the slippery gentleman, after having ascertained the amount of the bill, paid it in full.

"The tailor, having signed the receipt, placed it in the hands of the late debtor. The swindler then for the first time glanced at the items of which it was composed. He said nothing until he came to the last charge, which was for 'advertising,' when he broke forth:—

"Hallo! what's this for 'advertising'! That's an odd charge for a tailor's bill. You are cheating me!"

"Oh, no," coolly replied the Quaker;—"that is all right. I have charged you the cost of publishing the advertisement you just showed me."

Here the swindler uttered a horrid oath as he exclaimed:—

"Do you mean to tell me that you caused the publication of that advertisement?" "Truly I did," replied the Quaker, with provoking coolness.

"Then you told me a lie in it," quickly retorted the rogue.

"Convince me of that," said the Quaker, "and thou wilt find me ready to confess the fault."

"You said I should find something to my advantage if I would come here."

The rogue was completely mollified by the coolness of the Quaker, and stood speechless. "Now," said the Quaker, good-naturedly, "let me give thee a piece of advice. When next thou hast occasion to get a suit of clothes, thou hadst better not attempt to cheat the poor tailor, but pay him honestly, for them will thy conscience not disturb thee, and they sleep will be sweet and refreshing. Farewell!"

From the Baptist Register.
PATRICK HENRY.

The English Church having been established by law in Virginia, became, as all such establishments are wont to do, exceedingly intolerant towards other sects. In prosecution of this system of conversion, three Baptist clergymen had been indicted, at Fredericksburg, for preaching the Gospel of the Son of God contrary to the statute. Henry, hearing of this, rode some fifty miles to volunteer his services in defence of the oppressed. He entered the court, being unknown to all present save the bench and the bar, while the indictment was read by the clerk. He sat within the bar until the reading was finished, and the King's attorney had concluded some remarks in defence of the prosecution, when he arose, reached out his hand for the paper, and, without more ceremony, proceeded with the following speech:

"May it please your worship: I think I heard read by the prosecutors, as I entered this house, the paper I now hold in my hand. If I have rightly understood, the King's attorney of the colony has framed an indictment for the purpose of arraigning and punishing by imprisonment, three inoffensive persons before the bar of this court, for a crime of great magnitude—as disturbers of the peace. He here reads. Did I hear an expression as if a crime, that these men, whom your worships are about to try for misdemeanor are charged with—what?"

and continuing with a low solemn tone, "preaching the gospel of the Son of God!" Pausing amidst the most profound silence and breathless astonishment, he slowly waved the paper three times around his head, when, lifting his hands and eyes to heaven, with peculiar and impressive energy, he exclaimed, "Great God!" The exclamation—were the burst of feeling from the audience—were overpowering. Mr. Henry resumed:

"May it please your worship: In a day like this—when truth is about to break her fetters—when mankind are about to be aroused to claim natural and inalienable rights—when the yoke of oppression, that has reached the wilderness of America, and the unnatural alliance of ecclesiastical and civil power, are about to be dissolved—at such a period, when liberty—liberty of conscience—is about to awake from her slumberings, and inquire into the reason of such charges as I find exhibited here to-day in this indictment!" Another fearful pause, while the speaker alternately cast his sharp piercing eyes on the court and the prisoners, and resumed: "If I am not deceived, according to the contents of the paper I now hold in my hand, these men are accused of preaching the gospel of the 'Son of God! Great God!'" Another long pause, while he again waved the indictment around his head—while a deeper impression was made on the auditory. Resuming his speech: "May it please your worship: there are periods in the history of man when corruption and depravity have so long debased the human character, that man sinks under the weight of the oppressor's hand—becomes his servile, abject slave; he lacks the hand that smites him; he bows in passive obedience to the mandates of the despot; and, in this state of servitude, he receives his fetters of perpetual bondage. But may it please your worships, such a day has passed away! From that period when our fathers left the land of their nativity for liberty—for civil and religious liberty—for liberty of conscience to worship their Creator according to their own conceptions of Heaven's revealed will, from the moment they placed their feet upon the American continent, and in deeply imbedded forests sought an asylum from persecution and tyranny—from that moment despotism is crushed—the fetters of darkness were broken and heaven decreed that man should be free—free to worship God according to the Bible. Were it not for this, in vain were all their sufferings and bloodshed to subjugate this New World, if we, their offspring, must still be oppressed and persecuted. But, may it please your worships, permit me to inquire once more, for what are these men about to be tried? This paper says, 'for preaching the gospel of our Saviour to Adam's fallen race.'" And in tones of thunder he exclaimed:—"What law have they violated?"

While the third time, in a low dignified manner, he lifted his eyes to heaven, and waved the indictment around his head. The court and audience were now wrought up to the most intense pitch of excitement. The face of the prosecuting attorney was pallid and ghastly, and he appeared unconscious that his whole frame was agitated with alarm, while the judge, in a tremulous voice, put an end to the scene, now becoming excessively painful, by the authoritative declaration, "Sheriff discharge these men."

BREAD FROM GROWN WHEAT.—Having read a number of recipes on bread-making, from grown wheat, let me give you my experience, and I may venture to say that my bread is as white and light as is made by any person.

I use neither alum nor whiskey, nor do I kilndry or scald my flour. I use nothing to make it rise but hop-venst cakes, (or turnpike as they are called,) generally about one to two loaves of bread. Beat the cakes up with warm water until it is about as thin as gruel; mix your flour and water together in another pail until it forms a thin batter; then pour in your yeast cakes, and beat thoroughly together; set it away now until it rises, after which pour it into your kneading trough and work it with flour until it is hard and stiff as you can get it. Form your loaves now, and set them near the stove to rise until they become perfectly light; then bake in a hot oven for about three-quarters of an hour; take them out, and the next morning you will find that you have as good bread as you wish to eat.—Rural New Yorker
