

Millet.

The following communication, from the Germantown Telegraph, is well worth consideration. In no country in the world is vegetable economy carried to a higher degree than in China, yet there are whole districts where the natives plant nothing but millet.

There are probably but few of the cultivated grains that possess higher claims upon the attention of farmers engaged in stock raising, than millet. It would be extremely difficult, indeed, to assign a satisfactory reason for the general neglect it has experienced at the hands of our agriculturists, and equally difficult it is for us to conceive why, when all our other available resources are tasked to the uttermost, so little should be said in its favor, and no more vigorous efforts put forth to secure its more general introduction.

Millet requires for its successful cultivation, a soil replete with the fecundating remains of vegetable and animal organisms, and so constituted, chemically and mechanically, as to secure a due and equally graduated humidity. Extreme wet or extreme dryness acts detrimentally upon this crop, and it perhaps a greater degree than upon any other.

How to Kill Docks.

It would astonish any one who has not carefully examined the matter, to note the loss sustained by the vast majority of farmers, by a few pests that always occupy the most productive portions of the land, and often disfigure the very door yard, which should always have some air of neatness, however the tenement.

Among the most prevalent of these pests is the dock, which is often seen growing luxuriantly from under the very walls of the house, and in monopolizing rankness in the corners of the yard, as well as in massive bunches in meadows and lanes.

It is often so, no doubt, from the very prevalent opinion that nothing short of digging up the last fibre of the roots will exterminate them, when nothing more need be done than to cut off the top of the root, throw on a tumbler full of salt or a spoonful of strong brine, and not a sprout will ever again appear.

Farmers, try it and if "too busy," a little toy will entice children, too small for other work, to kill your docks, and learn habits of industry almost unconsciously.

SOWING GRAIN IN ORCHARDS.—We frequently see this folly along the line of our railroads, in our summer travels. Here we see a splendid crop of rye, and there a vigorous corn crop is planted in a young orchard.

We believe the practice to be bad husbandry. A neighbor of ours had an apple orchard set about ten years since. He took admirable care of it for several years; washing the trunks and larger limbs with strong soap suds, and manuring them abundantly. The orchard was a beautiful sight and began to bear fruit. The crop was a good one, but it proved disastrous to his orchard. It checked the growth of the wood, and it has borne no fruit since.

Similar facts are abundant in the experience of farmers. We cannot tell, perhaps all the causes of this injury to fruit trees. Any grain crop is a heavy draft upon the land, and probably uses up the material the young trees want to perfect their fruit. A grain crop shades the soil very much also, and this must prove injurious. It is well to keep a young orchard under cultivation for some years, but the ground should only be cropped with roots, and abundantly manured. An orchard will pay us for our trouble according to the capital and labor we spend upon its cultivation.

CARROTS.—We observe in several agricultural journals and papers, communications calling the attention of farmers to the fact, that carrots are not sufficiently used as an article of food for cattle. It is asserted that forty years of scientific observation and of experiment have settled, beyond question, that carrots are the best food, or at least the best staple for teams of horses. Lean hogs can be best started into fattening on them. A correspondent of the Farm Journal asserts that no food is superior for feeding oxen, or young cattle or mitch cows, and that finally, they fatten sheep profitably.

As a food for mitch cows in winter, nothing better can be found. They not only keep the animal in an excellent condition, but produce larger secretions of milk, and butter made from cows fed on carrots, will not only be finer, richer and more saleable color, but entirely free from the flavor which turns impart to it, and which is so disagreeable to most persons.

To a man has a right to be proud of anything it is a good action, done as it ought to be, without any cold suggestions of interest lurking at the bottom of it.

Geometry of the Human Form.

Man, say Bononi, is found to be constructed on purely geometric laws, though the beauty of his body and harmony of his parts are now forever, we suppose, hidden by the labors of the tailor. A great miracle is a house that widens and widens without reconstruction, and adapts itself to the fresh wants of every year—that widens and still preserves its relative proportions—that widens and preserves its original shape and form. Nature, in composition of the human frame, has so ordained that the face, from the chin to the highest point of the forehead whence the hair begins, is a tenth part of the whole stature; the same proportion obtains in the hand measured from the extremity of the middle finger. The head, from the chin to the top of the scalp, is an eighth. From the top of chest to the highest point of the forehead is a seventh. From the nipples to the top of the scalp is a fourth of the whole stature. If the length of the face, from the chin to the roots of the hair, be divided into three equal parts, the first division determines the place of the nostrils; the second point where the eyebrows meet. The foot is the seventh part of the height of the entire frame; the cubit and the chest are each a fourth. The other members have certain affinities which were always observed by the most celebrated of ancient painters and sculptors, and we must look for them in those productions which have excited universal admiration. The navel is naturally the central point of the human body; for if man should lie on his back with his arms and legs extended, the periphery of the circle which may be described about him, with the navel for its center, would touch the extremities of his hands and feet. The same affinities obtain if we apply a square to the human figure; for, like the contiguous sides, the height from the feet to the top of the head is found to be the same as the distance from the extremity of one hand to the other, when the arms are extended. The standards, according to which all measurements are wont to be made, are likewise deduced from the members of the body, such as the digit, the palm, the foot, and the cubit—all of which are subdivided by the perfect number which the Greeks call Teleios.

HAD HIM THERE.—The owner of one of the princely palaces on Blecker street New York, some time ago leased it for several years for two thousand dollars a year. The tenant failed, and his surety wished the owner to resume possession of the premises, which he refused to do—whereupon the surety opened a fashionable negro boarding house in the premises, stuck up a sign of "Colored People's Hall," established a restaurant for the colored population—and has balls thrice a week for the "upper ten" of sabbledom. From these he is realizing a thousand dollars a year, above rent and other expenses, and in his turn refuses the offer of the owner to take the premises off his hands. He won't pay rent until summoned before a Court when he appears just as a writ of ejectment is about to be issued. The owner has tried to get the house indited, but the neighbors won't complain of it as a disorderly house; they rather enjoy the fun, and many of them pay their twenty-five cents to see high life among the colored gentry.

LOOK NEARER HOME.—Twelve hundred tenement-houses in New York city! A dozen human beings in one room! A hundred families frequently huddled together in one house! And this is called the "enjoyment of life." What derision! What a bitter mockery of truth lies in these little words! The fresh air—the blessed sunlight—the blue sky above, and the fair earth beneath—what can such apologies for humanity know of such common treasures? And yet, without that knowledge, how can they be said to live! Here are sixty thousand people, at least, vegetating like early lettuce in hot-houses, all their miserable existence. Here are immortal souls enough to crowd all the churches in New York, and yet we send half a million a year to the ends of the earth to convert the heathen! Why not look nearer home?—Sunday Times.

A remarkable evidence of the American's veneration for Woman has just been exhibited in Indiana. The women in the town of Salem in that State mobbed the grog-shops of that place, spilled their liquors upon the earth and literally smashed the business of dram-selling. No resistance was made to them, more serious than barring doors and uttering humble entreaties. But a man, an unlucky he-owner of a newspaper, justified their action in the American Flag.—Presto, change! The liquor dealer flew at that Flag, struck it forthwith, and made a hashed pi of its cases, types, stands and presses.

WANTED TO KNOW.—"If Henry Ward Beecher has a Shooting Gallery in Brooklyn, where they practice with Sharpe's Rifles."—Utica Telegraph. We don't know about the Rifles, but we do know that Beecher has a "Shooting Gallery in Brooklyn," where he "pops down" sinners and hypocrites every Sunday. He is a most splendid "shot" too, and never fails to "bring down" his "game."—Ition Independent.

"Doctor, kin you tell me what's the matter with my child's nose? She allers keeps pickin' it." "It's probably an irritation of the gastric mucous membrane communicating a sympathetic irritation to the equilibrium of the ecerium." "Thar, now, that's just what I told Becky; She 'lowed it was worrums."

We love old people. We love their simple ways and old-fashioned speech. To laugh at their infirmities is to laugh at ourselves in advance. No gentleman or lady ever does so, or in any way treats honorable age with disrespect.

Mrs. Partington says she did not marry her second husband because she loved the male sex, but just because he was the size of her first protector, and would come so good to wear his old clothes out.

A man who puts aside his religion because he is going into society, resembles a person taking off his shoes because he is to walk upon thorns.

Keeping Eggs.—Eggs can be kept for years in lime water, made like common white wash. A pine barrel or tub is the best thing to put them in. First make your white wash; which must stand two or three weeks before using, or it will cook the eggs. Put the eggs into the barrel and pour on the lime water, the lime settles around the eggs, and the water should stand over them three or four inches deep. Always on top, and they will keep for years.
