

To Make Pure Wine of Apples.

Being aware that much wine sold for genuine champagne was manufactured from cider, we informed a correspondent a short time since of this fact in answer to his inquiry. The following letter was elicited by the reading of the answer referred to:

Messrs. Editors—I am well aware that imitation wines are now extensively made in the State of New Jersey from the juice of the apple, and more from the Harrison apple than from any other variety, and the most of it is made at Newark. Those knowing ones are correct with regard to its being a mixture of poisonous drugs not fit for the human stomach.

Having been in the horticultural business for over forty years I have had an eye single to those spurious wines from the juice of the apple. It is gratifying to me to think that when you come to taste and test my wine—which I send you accompanying this letter—you will find a wine, a pure article, free from all drugs, and not an imitation. The sample I send you is eighteen months old, and made after the following process:

Take pure cider made from sound ripe apples as it runs from the press. Put 60 pounds of common brown sugar into 15 gallons of the cider and let it dissolve, then put the mixture into a clean barrel, and fill the barrel up to within two gallons of being full with clean cider: put the cask in a cool place, leaving the bung out for 48 hours; then put in the bung with a small vent, until fermentation wholly ceases, and bung up tight, and in one year the wine will be fit for use. This wine required no racking, the longer it stands upon the lees the better. STRINE WILSON, Elkhart, Ind., April, 1856.

Gooseberry Mildew.

It is well known that mildew is so destructive to gooseberries in this country, that but few of the large and choice kinds ever perfect much of their fruit, and as a consequence one of the nicest of fruits but little seen in our market, in a ripe state. The writer of the Calendar for the Horticulturist, gives a very simple remedy, which if as good as represented, is well worthy of extensive application. The following is the remedy as we read it, merely require the application once. "When the fruit is forming:"

Mildew may be prevented, by watering with soap-suds, over the branches. A radical cure for this pest may be formed by mixing a peck of lime and a pound of sulphur, in ten gallons of water: let it stand and settle. A pint, in four gallons of water, syringed over the bushes when the fruit is forming, will keep them clean: cover the ground with manure, and spread a small quantity of salt over it, to keep as much moisture as possible about the root.

Mulching is undoubtedly a good thing, as it keeps the roots in a more uniform state as regards heat and moisture and salt is recommended by several different writers at this time. Our experience goes to prove that if planted under the shade of trees somewhat, they escape mildew, although the fruit is small. The fine show varieties of England are much more subject to it than the small rough kinds. The Whitesmith and Houghton, are perhaps the safest to plant.—Country Gentleman.

CISTERNS.—Every barn should have a cistern for the use of cattle in winter. A cistern is generally cheaper and better than a well, and as the distance to raise the water is so much less than from a well, a vast amount of labor is thus saved in pumping up the water. A cistern 10 feet in diameter and 9 feet deep, will hold 168 barrels. That is a very good size to make barn cisterns. If you want more capacity, make two. A cistern 5 feet in diameter will hold 2 1/2 barrels to each foot in depth; and 7 feet diameter, 9 1/2 barrels per foot; 8 feet, nearly twelve barrels; 9 feet, 13 1/2 barrels; 10 feet, 19 1/2 barrels per foot.

To DESTROY HOUSE FLIES.—Amongst the miseries of human life, during the warm season of the year, may be reckoned the tickling, and buzzing, and obtrusive familiarities of the common house flies. A correspondent of a British newspaper, tells us how to destroy these pests. He says:— "Pour a little simple oxymal (an article sold by the druggist) into a common glass tumbler, and place in the glass a piece of cap paper, made into the shape of the upper part of a funnel with a hole at the bottom to admit the flies. Attracted by the smell they readily enter the trap in swarms, and by the thousands soon collected, prove that they have not the wit or disposition to return.

PETRIED HEARTS.—It is said that when the venerable JOSHUA R. GIDDINGS, of Ohio, was so suddenly attacked with a fainting fit, during a recent speech in the House, Dr. A. K. Marshall, of Kentucky, immediately visited him "not as a patient," he said, "but to see if the d-d abolitionist was dead." Words fail to express our contempt of the despicable villain who could make such a declaration. And yet such men as he, and Herbert, and Brooks, and Keitt, are our lawmakers. There is no depth of infamy to which a people will not descend who send such men to Washington as their Representatives.

CHILDBOOD.—Oh, how beautiful is childhood—how trusting in love—how pure in faith! Why, why must these early dreams so soon depart? Why must the earth-stain fall upon the spirit, and rob it of its bright visions and confiding trust? Why must the care-gloom settle upon the sunny brow, and bounding heart? Oh, 'tis sad—'tis very sad to think how soon life's joyous hours are o'er—how soon its cares, and sorrows, and little disappointments, falls coldly on the enthusiastic spirit.

FRANKMONT will be our next President.

The Laughing Hero.

It was the morning of the 17th of March, 1836—Aurora, mother of dews and mistress of golden clouds, came as she almost ever comes to the living scenery of the plains of Goliad—a thing of beauty, queen of the sky, on a throne of burning amber, robed in the crimson of fire, with a diadem of purple, and streamers of painted pink. Oh! it was a glorious dawn, for the poet to sing of earth, or the saint to pray to heaven; but poet's song nor saint's prayer made not the matins of the place and the hour. Alas, no! it was a very different sort of music.

A hundred hoarse drums roared the loud reveille that awoke four hundred Texan prisoners and their guard four times their number of Mexican soldiers the elite of the Chief Butcher's army. The prisoner's were immediately summoned to parade before the post; in the main street of the village, and every tongue uttered the involuntary exclamation of confidence and hope. "Thanks, Santa Anna! He is going to execute the treaty! We shall be shipped back to the United States! We shall see our friends once more! Such were the feelings with which the American volunteers, and the few Texans among them, greeted the order to form into line.

The line was formed and then broken into two columns, when every instrument of music in the Mexican host sounded a merry march, and they moved away with a quick step over the prairies towards the West. Five minutes afterward, a singular dialogue occurred between the two leaders of the front columns of prisoners.

"What makes you walk so lame, Colonel Neil? Are you wounded?" asked a tall, handsome man, with blue eyes, and bravery flashing forth in his beams.

"Col. Fannin, I walk lame to keep from being wounded; do you comprehend?" replied the other with a laugh, and such a laugh as no words might describe—it was loud, so luxurious, like the roar of the breakers of a sea of humor; it was, in short, a laugh of the inmost heart.

"I do not comprehend you, for I am no artist in riddles," rejoined Fannin, smiling himself at the ludicrous gayety of his companion so strangely ill-timed.

"You discover that I am lame in each leg," said Col. Neil, glancing down at the members indicated, and mimicking the movements of a confirmed cripple, as he laughed louder than ever. "And yet," he added in a whisper, "I have neither the rheumatism in my knees, nor corns on my toes, but I have two big revolvers in my boots!"

"That is a violation of the treaty by which we agreed to deliver up our arms," Col. Fannin, mournfully suggested.

"You will see, however, that I shall use them before the sun is an hour high," replied Neil. "Ah! Fannin, you do not know the treachery of these base Mexicans." At this instant the sun rose in a sky of extraordinary brilliancy, and a million flower cups flung the rich odors abroad over the green prairie, as offering to the lord of light, when the mandate of 'halt' was given by one of Santa Anna's Aids, and the two columns of prisoners were broken and scattered over the plain, in small hollow squares, encircled on every side by Mexican infantry and troops of horses, with loaded muskets and drawn swords. And then came a momentary pause, awful in its stillness, and disturbed only by an occasional shriek of terror, as the most timid among the captives realized an impending storm of fire and extinction of life's last hope.

And then the infernal work of wholesale murder begun, and a scene ensued such as scarcely might be matched in the very annals of war itself. The roar of musketry burst in successive peals like appalling claps of thunder, but could not utterly drown the prayers of the living, the screams of the wounded, and more terrible groans of the dying!

Col. Fannin, fell among the first victims, but not the giant Neil. With the order of the Mexican officer to his men to fire, our hero stooped almost to the earth so that the volley passed entirely over him. He waited not for a second; thrusting a hand into a leg of each boot, he rose with a couple of six shooters, the deadly revolvers, and commenced discharging them with the quick rapidity of lightning into the thickest ranks of his foes.

Panic stricken with surprise and fear, the Mexicans recoiled and opened a passage, through which Neil bounded with the spring of a panther and fled away, as if wings were tied to his heels, while half a dozen horsemen gave him chase. For a while it seemed doubtful whether the giant Colonel would not distance even these, so much had the perils of the occasion increased the natural elasticity of his mighty muscles. But presently a charger fleetier than the rest might be discerned gaining on his human rival, and approaching so near that the dragon raised his sabre for a coup de grace. Neil became conscious of his danger, and hastily slackened his speed, till the hot stream of smoke from the horse's nostrils appeared to mingle with his very hair; and then wheeling suddenly, he fired another round from a revolver, and the rider tumbled from his saddle. The victim then renewed his flight.

A mad yell of grief and rage broke from the remaining troopers as they witnessed the fate of their comrade, and its effect was immediately evident in the augmented caution of their pursuit—for they galloped afterwards in one body, thereby greatly retarding their progress, so that Neil reached the river before them. He paused not a moment, but plunged headlong down a steep bank into the current and struck for the other shore. The dragons discharged their side-arms ineffectually, and gave over the chase.

In a few minutes, Neil landed, and as he felt satisfied that he was really saved, burst into an insupportable convulsion of laughter, and exclaimed: "It will kill me just to see how astonished the yellow devils looked, when I hauled the revolver out of my boots!"—Incidents of the Massacre of Goliad.
