

THE COQUETTE

Coquettes are both masculine and feminine. The male coquette knows his victim. He never thinks of casting his "sheep's eyes" at a woman of sense. He selects some pretty, simple, smiling, dimpled doll of humanity whose whole brain, if condensed into the gaseous state into a solid, would be larger than a homoeopathic pill; and hangs around her as long as an old tabby cat about a mouse hole.

There's the female coquette, too. She is married or single, handsome or homely, six feet or six inches, a dainty, dainty, dainty, or outwardly plain, modest and discreet, graceful, tasteful, child-like, trifling. By the way, "the perfection of art is" often "to conceal art."

Well, she never attacks a man of sense. She selects Mr. Somebody—may be married, may be single—little does she which. He is a good natured man with plenty of room in the upper story, who has an unfortunate reputation for all womanhood, and stands surrounded by his mortal sisters, like a man in the center of a large library, his eye roving over the shelves in utter bewilderment, wondering which book among all those gilded covers, contains the most valuable amount of reading matter.

A CLEAN SELL.—A shrewd countryman was in town the other day, gawky, uncouth and innocent in appearance, but in reality with his eye teeth out. Passing up Chatham street, through the Jews quarter he was continually encountered with importunities to buy. From almost every store some one rushed out, in accordance with the annoying custom of that street, to seize upon him and try and force him to purchase. At last, one dirty-looking fellow caught him by the arm, and clamorously urged him to become a customer.

"Have you got any shirts?" inquired the countryman with a very innocent look. "A splendid assortment, sir." Step in, sir. Every price, sir, and every style. The cheapest in the street, sir. "Are they clean?" "To be sure, sir. Step in, sir." "Then," resumed the countryman, with perfect gravity, "put on one, for you need it."

The rage of the shopkeeper may be imagined as the countryman turned upon his heel, quietly pursuing his way. A GRACEFUL COMPLIMENT.—It was a judicious resolution of a father, when, being asked what he intended to do with his girls, he replied, "I intend to apprentice them to their excellent mother, that they may learn the art of improving time, and be fitted to become wives, mothers, and heads of families, and useful members of society."

MACAULAY says that "those means are most correct which best accomplish the ends;" and Charles Dickens affirms that "all good ends can be worked out by good means.—Those that cannot be bad, and may be considered so at once, and left alone." Soon as hear disabbling discourse, and repeat it again to the persons concerned, are much mistaken if they think to oblige them by such indiscreet chaff and dence.

Why is a hungry boy looking in a cookshop window, like a wild horse? "Because he would be all the better if he had a bit in his mouth." My opponent, Mr. Speaker, persists in saying that he is entitled to the floor.—Whether he is or not, I shall not inquire. All I have to say is, that he will get floored if he interrupts me again.
