The Reward of Courtesy.

A few years since, on a radiant spring nsternoch, two men, who, from their conversation, appeard to be foregners, stoopped before the gate of one of the large workshops in Philadelphia for the manufacture of locomotive engines. Entering a small office, the elder of the two men inquired of the superintendent if he would permit them to inspect the works.

"You can pass in, and look about," said the superintendent, vexed apparently, at being disturbed in the perusal of his newspaper. He then scanned the two strangers more closely. They were respectably but plainly clad, and evidently made no profession to official dignity of any kind.

"You must pick your own way gentleman," replied the superintendent, "we are all too busy to attend to every body that comes along. I'll thank you not to interrupt the workmen by asking questions." It was not so much the matter as the manner of this reply, that was offensive to Mr. Wolf and his companion. It was spoken with a cortainly official assumption of superiority mingled with contempt for his visitors, indicating a haughty and selfish temper, on the part of the speaker.

"I think we will not trouble you, said Mr. Wolf, bowing; and taking his companion's arm they passed out.

"If there is anything I heartily dislike, it is incivility," said Mr. Wolf, when they were in the street. "I do not blame the man for not wishing to show us over the establishment; he is no doubt interrupted by many heedless visitors, but he might have dissmised us away better content with a gracious refusal than with an ungracious consent."

"Perhaps," said the other, we shall have better luck here," and they stopped before another workshop of a similar kind. They were received by a brisk little man, the head clerk, apparently, who, in reply to their request to be shown over the establishin nt, answered, "O, yes! come with me gentlemen—this way." So saying, he hurried them along the area strewed with iron hars broken and rusty wheels of iron, fragments of old boilers and cylinders, into the principal workshop. Here without stopping to explain any one thing, he led the strangers along, with the evident intention of getting rid of them as possible. They paused where the workmen were riveting external eastings of a boiler, the clerk looked at his wich, tapped with his foot against an iron tube, and showed other signs of impatience; whereupon Mr. Wolf remarked," "we shall not detain you longer, sir," and with this he took his leave.

"That man is an improvement on the other," said Mr. Wolf, "all the civility he has is on the surface; it does not come from the heart. We must look further." The strangers walked on nearly half a mile in silence, when one of them pointed to an humble sign, with a picture of a locomotive engine with a train of cars underneath. It overtopped a small building not more than ten feet in height, communicating with a vard and workshop. "Look," said the observer, "here is a machinist whose name is not on our list." "Probably it was thought too small a concern for our purpose," said his companion. "Nevertheless, let us try it," said Mr. Wolf. They entered, and found at the desk, a middle-aged man, whose somewhat grim aspect and apron around his waist, showed that he divided his labors between his workshop and the counting-room. "We want to look over your works, if you have no objections." "It will give me great pleasure to show you all that is to be seen," said the mechanic with a pleased alacrity, ringing a bell, and telling the boy who entered to take charge of the office. He then led the way, and explained to the strangers the whole process of erecting a locomotive engine. He showed them how various parts of the machinery were manufacture patiently answered their questions. He told them the mode of tubing boilers, by which the power of generating steam was increased, and showed with what care he provided for security from · bursting. Two hours passed rapidly away. The strangers were delighted with the intelligence displayed by the mechanic, and with his frank, unsuspicious manners. Here is a man who loves his profession so well, that he takes pleasure in explaining its mysteries to all who can understand them," thought Mr. Wolf.

"I am afraid we have given you a great deal of trouble," said the other stranger."
"Indeed, gentlemen I have enjoyed your visit," said the mechanic, "and I shill be glad to see you again." "Perhaps you may," said Mr. Wolf, and the two strangers departed. Five months elansed after, as the mechanic whose means were limited, sat in his office meditating how hard it was to get business by such large establishments as were his competitors, the two strangers entered. He gave them a hearty welcome, handed chairs, and all sat

"We come," said Mr. Wolfe, "with a proposition to you from the Emperor of Russia to visit St. Petersburg."

"From the Emperor? Impossible!"

"Here are our credentials."

"But gentlemen," said the now agitated mechanic, "what does this mean? How have I carned such an honor ?"

"Simply by your straight-forward, cour tesy and frankness, combined with professional intelligence," said Mr. Wolf. Because we are strangers you did not think it necessary to treat us with distrust or coldness. You saw we were really interested in acquainting ourselves with your work and you did not ask us, before extending to us your civilities, what letters of introduction we brought. You measured us by the dignities we have exhibited." The mechanic visited St. Petersburg, and soon afterwards removed his whole establish. ment. He had imperial orders for as many locomotives as he could construct. He has lately returned to his own country, and is still receiving large returns from his Russia workshop. And all his property grew out of unselfish civility to two strangers, one of

A New Kind of Soap has recently been invented, which promises to su-persede all other kinds of hard soap. It is used ex-tensively for washing clothes, and possesses the re-markable property of extracting dirt without boiling the clothes and without the use of the rubbing board. The process of washing requires less than half the time, and only about half the labor, by using this Patent Soap. This article is preuliarly excellent, and superior to any thing else called Soap; because while it saves time and between the course time. while it saves time and labor, it never rots or injures the clothes.
