THE TIOGA COUNTY AGITATOR.

Trick of a Lover.

One fine winter evening early in the present century, Colonel -----, and his maiden sister, Patty, were sitting on each side of a delightful hickory fire, enjoyidg "otium cum dignitate." without any interruption for at least an hour; and that, considering the sex of Miss Patty was very remarkable. The Colonel was sitting cross-legged in a great arm chair, with his spectacles on, and his pipe in one hand and a newspaper in the other, fast asleep. Miss Patty was moving herself gently backward and forward in a low rocking chair. Close by her feet was the cat, while Carlo was stretched out at full length on the rug in front of the fire, and. like his master, fast asleep. At length the Colonel roused from nis nap, took off his spectacles and rubbed his eves. Then glancing at a very large pile of papers that lay on the table near him, said : "I wish Henry was here to help me about my rents." "Well, I really wish he was," answered his sister. "I can't expect him this month yet," yawned the Colonel. "Hadn't you better send for him ?" said his sister. Upon this the dog got up and walked toward the door. "Where are you going, Carlo ?" said the old gentleman.

The dog looked in his master's face wagged his tail, but never said a word, and pursued his way towards the door; and as he could not well open it himself, Miss Patty got up and opened it for him. The Colonel seemed perfectly satisfied, and was composing himself for another nap, when the loud and cheerful barking of the dog announced the approach of some one, and roused him from his lethargy. Presently the door was opened, and a young man gaily entered the room.

"Why, William Henry, is that you ?" said Aunt Patry.

"Henry, my boy, I am heartily glad to see you," said the Colonel, getting entirely out of the chair, and giving his nephew a hearty shake of the hand. "Pray, what has brought you home so suddenly ?"

"Oh, I do not know," said Henry. "It is rather dull in town, so I thought I would just step up and see how you all come on."

"Well I am glad to see you. Sit down," said the Colonel.

"So do," said his sister.

"There, aunt, is a bottle of first-rate snuff for you; and here, uncle, is one of capital Maraschino."

"Thank you, my boy," said the Colonel "Positively it does my heart good to see you in such fine spirits."

"And mine too," said his sister.

Henry, either anxious to help his uncle or himself, broke the seal from the top of the bottle of cordial, and drew the cork, while aunt Patty got some glasses.

"Well, my boy," said the Colonel, whose good humor increased every moment, "what is the news in B----? Anything happened ?"

"No-ves," said Henry ! "I have got one of the best stories to tell you that you have ever heard in your life."

"Come, let's have it," said he filling his glass.

"Well, you must know," said Henry, that while I was in town, I met with an old and particular friend of mine, about my own age. About two months ago he fell desperately in love with a young girl and wants to marry her, but dares not without the consent of his uncle, a very fine old gentleman, as rich as Cræsus-do take a little more cordial."

"Why don't his uncle wish him to marry ?" inquired the Colonel.

"Oh, yes," resumed Henry. "But there's the rub. He is very anxious that Bill should get a wife, but he is terribly afraid that He'd be taken in; for it is generally understood niece !! "Would you ?", inquired Henry, patting the dog.

would give a thousand dollars for such a

"Yes, that I would;" replied the Colonel, and nine thousand more on the top of it and that makes ten thousand; shoot me if l would not."

"Then I'll introduce you to her to-morrow," said Henry.

As there was a wedding at the house of he worthy Colonel the ensuing week, and as the old gentleman was highly pleased with the beautiful and accomplished bride, it is reasonable to suppose that Henry did not forget his promise.

that he is to be the old gentleman's heir .--And, as for his uncle, though very liberal in everything else, he suspects every lady who pays his nephew the least attention of being a fortune hunter."

"The old scamp," said the Colonel ; "why can't he let the boy have his own way ?"

"I think as much," said Patty. "Well, how did he manage?" said the Colonel.

"Why," said Henry, "he was in a confounded pickle. He was afraid to ask his uncle's consent right out ; he could not manage to let him see the girl, for she lives at some distance. But he knew that his uncle enjoyed a good joke, and was an enthusiastic admirer of beauty. So, what does he do but go and get her miniature taken, for she was extremely beautiful, besiees being intelligent and accomplished."

"Beautiful ! intelligent ! accomplished !" exclaimed the Colonel; "pray, what objection could the fool have to her ?

"Why, she is not worth a cent," said Henry.

"Fudge H' said the Colonel ; "I wish I had been in the old chap's place; how did he get along?"

- "Why, as I said, he had a picture taken, and as it was about the time for collecting rents, he thought it would make the old man good natured if he went home and offered to assist him ; and so, answering all inquiries, he took the miniature out of his pocket, handed it to his uncle, and asked; him how he liked it-telling him that a particular friend lent it to him. The old man was in an ecstacy of delight, and declared he would give the world to see a woman as handsome as that, and that Bill might have her."

"IIa !" shouted the Colonel, "the old chap was well come up with. The best joke I ever heard; but was she really beautiful ?"

"The most angelic creature I ever saw," said Henry-"but you can judge for your. self. He lent me the picture, and knowing your taste that way; I brought it for you to look at."

Here Henry took it out of his pocket and handed it to his uncle, at the same time fillmg her gines. Aunt Polly got out of her cours to look at the picture.
