

Henry Ward Beecher.

A lady of Mr. Beecher's congregation, Augusta Moore, has just published a collection of memorable sayings from his discourses, with some remarks about the man. We take from it the following:

"Although Mr. Beecher himself seldom appears to be in much haste, there is always an air of being in a hurry about his clothes and his hair,—they manifest intentions of going forward, whether he goes or remains standing still. His neck is so short that he never ventures a standing up collar. This, probably, is in consideration for his ears.

One very remarkable singularity in his face is the utter incongruity between its front and its side views. Upon being told that he resembled Henry Ward Beecher, a relative of that clergyman replied, laughingly, "I know that I am said to look like him; but 'his such resemblance as a sheep bears to a lion.'" Now the fact is, were that humble-minded relative of the famed "lion" a great deal more like a "sheep" than he considers himself to be, he might still bear striking resemblance to his cousin; for though when he turns full towards you, in the heat of his discourse, Mr. Beecher frequently does present the appearance of a lion, it is next to impossible for a person of an imaginative turn of mind to view his profile without being strongly reminded of ovine faces seen and perhaps loved in the days and the years gone by.

When not in a "brown study," Mr. Beecher's manners are the most free and genial that can be imagined; but every year seems to render him more and more abstracted. People are sometimes hurt and offended by his indifference and forgetfulness of them, when he is utterly unconscious of all outward things, intent upon his next sermon or lecture; for he makes his sermons in the streets, in stores, in lumber yards, on ferry boats or wherever he may chance to be. And it is plain to be seen, that a man in the midst of sermon making cannot be very thoughtful in his manners to those who chance to pass or to pause beside him.

He is not a greater man, not a more learned man, not a better man, than many other ministers who never can keep people awake. But he is more alive. Why; there is intense life in all that, in desk or pulpit, he does or says. What wonder that he who is so vivid there should sometimes sicken and smoulder when the excitement of his work is over.

Mr. Beecher is a sound and vigorous man, physically; but he cannot last always—he, as well as others, must die; and where is the material that shall live after him that shall show to the future world that a man once lived and died? He is now forty-six years old, and not yet are prepared the witnesses which shall speak for him after he has gone hence. Full measure, pressed down, running over, has his life ever given; but will he be of their number whose dying is but an endless multiplying of their life? His sermons, matchless as they are, are seldom fully written out; and no mortal hand but his can properly touch them. Hitherto he has not, except in one or two instances, given to the world proof of what he is. In his pulpit—on his own platform—he is seen and known—known to such as have listened to him of—on no one can judge of Henry Ward Beecher from one or two sermons. No crystal was ever so many-sided as he; all sides so bright and pure; but abroad, where he goes to lecture, they neither see nor hear him.

Henry Ward Beecher came of a goodly stock; Welch blood, with its poetry and music, flows in his veins. He is indeed a poet; though it is not known that ever in his life he made one line to rhyme with another. But yet his before a fine painting, and the poetic, frezzy that comes mightily upon him there.

He is not much gifted with prudence in the use of money; and is so generous towards those that have need of his aid, that as a gentleman of his congregation remarked, when there was talk in regard to raising his salary: "Three thousand dollars a year is, as far as his own interest is concerned, just as good as ten thousand; for he has nothing now when the end of the year comes; and he would have no more then."

Brain-Work.
Over-work of the brain, against which we hear so many people cry, and which we hear so many coazy-looking men deplore so heartily in their own persons, is not by a good deal so dangerous as under-work of the brain, that rare and obscure calamity from which nobody is supposed ever to suffer. The Rev. Onesimus Howd drops his chin and eaves his eyes, upsets his digestion with excess of tea and muffin, and supports, upon the doughy face he thus acquires, a reputation for the great strain on his brain caused by the outpouring of a weekly puddle of words. His friends labor to prop up his brain with added piles of muffin. Paler becomes his face, and more idiotic his expression, as he lives from New Year's day to New Year's day rattling about in his empty head the few ideas of other men he has contrived to borrow, and tranquilly claims all the sweets of indulgence on account of the strain put upon his wits. Dr. Porpice is wheeled about from house to house in his brougham; prescribes his cordials and his mild aperients; treats, by help of what knowledge gathered from a past generation may happen to have grown into his habit of practice, all the diseases he sees; and now and then turns to a book when he is puzzled, but more commonly dozes after dinner. Yet very gladly does the doctor hear the talk about immense strain on his mind, large practice, great responsibility, and the wondering that one poor head can carry all he knows.

He seldom passes a day without having taken care to confide to somebody that he is overworked. Once a week, indeed, if his practice be large, he may be forced into some effort to use his brains; but that he does really exercise them once a week, I am not certain. The lawyer elevates his routine into a crush of brain-work. The author and the merchant flatter themselves, or account themselves flattered, by an application to their labors also of the same complimentary condolence. The truth is, that hard work of the brain, taken alone—apart from griefs and fears, from forced or voluntary stinting of the body's need of food or sleep, and the mind's need of social intercourse—does infinitely more to prolong life and strengthen reason in the worker than to cut or fray the thread of either. Men break down under the grind of want, under the strain of a continuous denial to the body of its half a dozen hours of sleep a day, its few necessary pounds of wholesome food, and its occasional exercise of tongue and legs. If an author spends his whole life in his study, his mind fails under the pressure of the solitary system. If a great lawyer refuses himself month after month the necessary fourth part of the day for sleep, he wears his brain out, not by repetition of study, but by privation of something else. Under all ordinary circumstances no man who performs work for which he is competent is called upon to deny himself the first necessities of life, except during short periods of encroachment which occur to men in every occupation, and which seldom are of long duration, and can almost invariably be followed by a period of ease sufficient for recovery. Healthy men, while they have had and board assured them, while they can eat, sleep, stir, and be merry, will have sound minds, though they work their brains all day, and provide them for the other five or six hours with that light employment which is the chief toil of Dr. Porpice or the Reverend Onesimus.—Household Words.

DOLEFUL TIMES IN THE WESTERN COUNTRY.

The traveling correspondent of The Madison (Wis.) Journal gives a very gloomy picture of his experience in the country. He writes:

"To travel round among the farmers as we have done for the last four weeks, and hear 'hard times' repeated forty times a day, as excuse for not taking a paper, or paying up old scores; to see men, women and children in threadbare and tattered garments; paper pasted, boards nailed up, or old hats or clothes stuffed into windows where should be glass; to find country stores closed, or doing very little; men working for their board, or a mere trifle; promises to pay, whether verbal or written, of no account; men even denying their own notes; to see the closest economy practiced by all, those whose large houses and barns indicate considerable means, as well as those living in cabins; to hear the dolorous complaints of taxes—one realizes the severity with which the financial pressure is felt."

A brakeman by the name of Tuttle, a resident of Owego, was killed on Friday near Big Flats, in consequence of falling from the top of a freight car in passing from one to another. It is a singular circumstance that he had but recently taken the place on that train of a brakeman who was killed in a similar manner at about the same spot.—Corning Journal.

BUCHU LEAVES are procured from the southern part of Africa. The Hottentots at the Cape of Good Hope have long used this article as a remedy in a variety of diseases. From them the medicine was borrowed by the English and Dutch physicians residing there and by their recommendation it was soon employed in Europe. In process of time this medicine has come into general use, and is highly spoken of by the best medical writers. Physicians recommend it mostly for complaints of the urinary organs, such as gravel, a morbid irritation of the bladder and urethra, retention of urine, also incontinence of urine from want of tone in the urinary organs. It cools the unnatural heat and relieves pain; and in many cases of long standing it has been effectual when other valuable medicines had failed to produce an effect. The active principle of this medicine is a volatile oil which is mostly lost by the old process of boiling. Hence it requires great care and skillful management to prepare this medicine properly.
FLUID EXTRACT OF BUCHU is a strong or concentrated preparation prepared by the new process called "Displacement." By this the valuable properties of the Buchu are entirely preserved, and this form of the medicine is less liable to injury from age and more palatable. Useful equally in all cases of the kind, whether male or female. Price 75 cents per bottle. For sale at Roy's Drug and Chemical Store at Wellsboro Pa.
This is no patent medicine or quack nostrum or secret remedy, but a new and improved preparation of a well known and valuable medicine.
