NELLIE GRAY.

There's a low mossy valley on the old Kentucky shore, Where I've whiled many happy hours away, A-sitting and a-singing by the little cabin door, Where lived my darling Nellie Gray. Oh! my poor Nellie Gray, They have taken her away, And I'll never see my darling any more; I am sitting by the river, And am weeping all the day.

For she's gone from the old Kentucky shore. When the moon had climbed the mountain and the sta were shining too, I would take my darling Neilie Gray, And paddle down the river in my little red canoe, While my banjo so sweetly I would play.

Oh! my poor Nellie Grav. &c. One day I went to see her-she had gone the neigh bors said; The white man had bound her in his chain'; He had taken her to Georgia, there to wear her life away, As she toiled 'mid the cotton and the cane. Oh! my poor Nellie Gray, &c.

My canoe is under water and my banjo is unstrung I am tired of living any more; My eyes shall look downward and my song shall be unsung While I stay on the old Kentucky shore. Oh! my poor Nellie Gray, &c. My eyes are getting blinded and I cannot see my way There's somebody knocking at the door; I hear the angels calling, and I see my Nellie Gray-Farewell to the old Kentucky shore. Oh ! my poor Nellie Gray, Up in heaven there they say, They'll never take you from me any more: I am coming, coming, coming,

As the angels clear the way-Farewell to the old Kentucky shore.

Iron.

A once famous British Minister, Mr. Horner said that iron was the machinery of civilized society; and Locke declared that if the use of iron were lost among mankind they would unavoidably return to the savage state. At the same time he styles the person who first made use of iron, the "father of arts and author of plenty; for of iron all tools are made, and with the tools thus made man tills the earth, huilds houses, makes clothes, constructs steam engines, builds railroads, constructs ships, steamboatsin fine, does all the busines of civilized life.

The progress of civilization may be noted by the greater or less use of iron. At first, the only implements for digging, cutting, hewing, or any like purpose, were made of ston e. The London Quarterly Review, in an article which led us to indite these reflections upon the value and universality of iron, says there is a museum at Copenhagen in which the parallelism between the advance of civilization and the advance in the working of metals is illustrated by articles taken from ancient burying-grounds. The first tools were sharpened stone : for man was then a savage, and his wants were few .-This 'stone period" is succeeded by a copper period : for copper requires, comparatively, but little smelting, and is often found entirely pure. This is called the 'bronze period'-a period, we believe, to which our Indians never arrived .--In the 'copper period' tillage was practiced, and the other arts with tools of copper, at the same time that gold became known and esteemed. Last of all came iron.

It is inconceivable to what different purposes iron can be applied, when no other material, nor all other materials combined, could answer the purpose-a cambric needle and a Nasmyth hammer, the Peacemaker carrying a two-hundred-pound ball, and the most delicate surgcon's instrument, the anchor of a seventy-four and one of Rodger's razors, the huge steam-engine and the mainspring of a watch; that all things, contrasting so much in quality, appearance, size, delicacy and use, should be made of the same material, is passing strange. Nor have all the uses to which iron can be appropriated been even yet fully understood. Every day and year seems to bring forth a new

CARE OF THE EYES --- Crawford, the celebrated sculptor, had an inveterate babit of reading in a reclining position. One eye had to be taken out in consequence of a cancerous tumor form-ing behind it, and his life has paid the forfeit after years of suffering and the expenditure of a large amount of money. Prescott, the histo-rian, in consequence of a disorder of a nerve, by which the eyes were rendered useless for all writing purposes, could not use a pen, as he was unable to see when it failed to make a mark for want of ink; nor could he distinguish the lines or edges of his paper. Yet with these disadvantages he wrote all his historicals, using an agate stylas on carbonated paper, being guided as to the lines or edges by brass wire drawn through a wooden frame. But with all these hinderances, he has made himself one of the most readable of modern historians, and earned a fortune besides.

To avoid these and other similar calamities, we urge upon the young, especially, never to use the eyes by any artificial light, where nicety of sight is required, nor to use them in any strained position, or while riding in rail cars or carriages. We urge upon parents in view of the many incurable eye diseases, to caution their children against reading by twilight; that is, not before sunrise nor after sunset. It would be greatly better not to allow them to read or sew by any artificial light, but if that is unavoidable, let it be imperative that they cease by nine o'clock at night in summer, and by ten, al farthest, in winter. It is a most inexcusable folly, and will, sooner or later, bring its nunishment, to read or sew by gas, or lamp, or candle light, and then sleep after daylight next morning, as a habit. To all persons, of all ages, it is a most injurious practice.-Hall's Journal of Health.

WIFE OR WOLF .-- In France the Society for the Protection of Animals does not enjoy that popular respect which it deserves, the small wits of the capital indulging in endless jokes at its expense. The last joke is to this effect : A countryman, armed with an immense club, resents himself before the president of the Society and claims the first prize.—He is asked to describe the acts of humanity on which he founds his claim---'I have saved the life of a wolf,' replied the countryman. 'I might easily have killed him with this bludgeon,' and he swung the weapon in the air. to the intense discomfort of the president.'

'But where was the wolf ? inquired the latter, what had he done to you?' 'Ile just devoured my wife,' was the quick eply. The president reflects an instant and then he ays-"My friend, I am of the opinion that you have been sufficiently rewarded.' LIKE a bell that's rung for fire; like a ceaseless auction crier, like oftimes, a graceless liar -mischief-making tattlers go. Stopping you with quaking fear, whispering as you lend an ear, "Mercy on us! did you hear? Betsy Bean has got a beau!"

THE SOLITARY HORSEMAN .--- The men who inhabited the banks of the Wabash river, in Indiana, some twenty-five or thirty years ago, were probably very fine men in their way, but the "way" of some of them was sometimes an unpleasant one. At the time of which we speak the people of Bagtown and Shagtown were having a great controversy as to where the county buildings should be located. The Bagtowners said they must be put up at Bagtown ; while the Shagtowner insisted that they should be erected in Shagtown. Near the close of a sultry day in August, as the bright daygod was about setting in the western horizon, a solitary horseman might have been seen riding slowly into the picturesque village of Shagtown Court was in session, and the horseman rode leisurely up to the door of the court-house.-A young lawyer was addressing the jury in strains of impassioned eloquence, and the venerable Judge Merkins was sleeping sweetly in his arm chair. The solitary horseman's name was William Perkins, and he resided in Bagtown. Unslinging his rifle, he took good aim at the judge through the doorway, and, saying in a tragical voice, "You Shagtown folks have got the court 'us, by --- I'll have a pop at ye," be fired. The ball slightly grazed the left cheek of the judge, and lodged in the wood-work just behind him. The judge awoke just in time to see the solitary horseman wheel his steed preparatory to going back to Bagtown. "Hold on, you d-n rascal !" shouted the judge, jumping violently up; "you shot that gun, Bill Perkins, and I fine you ten dollars for contempt of court!" There are no documents in the archives of Indiana stating whether Mr. Perkins paid his fine or not.—Plaindcaler.

LITTLE THORNS .- The sweetest, the most clinging affection is often shaken by the slightest breath of unkindness, as the delicate tendrils of the vine are agitated by the faintest air that blows in summer. An unkind word from one beloved often draws the blood from many a heart which would defy the battle-axe of hatred, or the keenest edge of vindictive satire. Nay, the shade, the gloom of the face familiar and dear, awakens grief and pain. These are the little thorns which, though men of rougher form may make their way through them without feeling much, extremely incommode persons of a more refined turn in their journey through life, and make their traveling irksome and unpleasant.

A Clergyman was censuring a young lady for tight-lacing. 'Why,' returned the miss, 'you certainly would not recommend loose habits to your parishioner.' The clergyman smiled.
