RY LARISON, oldest son of William and Sarah Larison, in the 37th year of his age.

Anoble man swells the list of mortality, The deceased was one of the prominent, and most highly respected citizens of Clymer township. Honor, integrity and morality, had won for him universal exteen. By and ting industry and rare prudence, he had acquired a handsome fortune; his family relations were of the most gratifying character; and the furture scemer of the most gratifying character; and demestic happiness. But how transitory are the fondest earthly hopes, when not in keeping with Infinite design! He was slinest momentarily, anumoned to tid adien to earthly access, sad enter the world of spirits. His disease was the rupture of an internal blood vessel, supposed to have occurred while he was at work, and but a few hours intervened between the commencement of viceding, and his death. His last hours were singularly striking and impressaive. He retained his mental vigor in perfect clearness to the satt, and though he knew nis disease was fatal, and that certain dissolution was at hand, yet is his bearing and discourse, the required fortitude and calmness of Socrates when dying, were fully reproduced. Though his surroundings were his dying cruch; and loyed ones upon whom he was looking for the last time, whose hearts were wrung with anguish, manifested in tears, and sobs, and tandar expressions, such as only a death-bed can call forth, yet he man all with a sublime resignation; and to outward appending, his minim was so tranquil and composed as if he were at his breakfast table. He admonished the mourning group that they must all soon die; sud though he love for his wife and children amenuned almost of the died them to be good, and kind to each other; and thus dropped away with the seeming tranquility of a sun-set. Long will his memory be found; cheriched is this community. The subject of this notice was a member of the consolations of the Gospel to the afflicted family and a large congregation of sympathiring friends.
