A HOMELY ON A HOMELY. BY DOUGLAS A. SMITH. I have read, witty Saxe, your best verses on eunuchs, (It's a game I have played, although never for jocos, And if you but knew it as well as I do, You would find an excellent and excellent poet.) You teach a lesson more pertinent than mine, To be gleaned from the sentence, "I'll play it alone." Self-reliance, we know, is an excellent trait; The advanced guard of science, so patiently wait Until time has developed the truth they proclaim; Deserve a high place on the pedestal of fame; And often in life, as in Rochester, You make a Big March when you march it alone." But to "go it alone" you do not understand; You must hold the Big Knave's hand back in your hand. And too often in life, in a similar way, You depend on such cards to win your tricks, So that something too much of the knave may be shown. In a selfish desire to "go it alone," But the game you describe as a "strife," Has a moral to point for the benefit of all; It is this: when the cards are dealt, stand on the stand. And each player looks anxiously to his hand; How bravely your partner will look on your side; If cheered by the sound of your voice, "I'll assist." The great Galileo, imprisoned and bound, In the depth of his sorrow this motto he found, When angry Dominicans hurled at his head, All the wrath on which bigotry's head is fed. A fair form appeared through the barred window mist, And a daughter's soft voice was heard to say, "I'll assist."

What's the use of this world, if it is cold, And selfishly seek all the honors of the world, Repelling your neighbors with the force of stone, And the words, harshly spoken, "I'll play it alone!" No—No! higher up on human life, He who can cheerfully say, "I'll assist." Then in love! Oh, rash poet! if the those bright eyes Are gazing in yours with a tender gaze, Should apply to your own case the general you've shown. And quietly tell you to "play it alone," With what passionate ardor those lips would be kissed Till they murmured once more the words—"I'll assist!" Then shuffle the pack! Cut the cards once again, And let a new moral awaken your mind; Go! teach to the world that the motto is true, May be lightened to all who take the strife, If the generous lesson thus taught, be missed, And each man to his neighbor will say—"I'll assist."

EDUCATIONAL. In our last article we noted some of the things necessary to gain an education. We will now notice some of the benefits of a good education. 1st. It will give a man great power and influence among his fellow-men. It will not if a man has the energy and perseverance of a Columbus that would enable him to discover worlds if there were any more, or to discover the integrity, fidelity, and patriotism of a Washington, that would cause him to lay down his life for his country, yet if he does not possess a good education he will lose the great influence which he otherwise might have. The reason of this is plain. People always have more respect for the opinions of educated men and are more willing to follow their advice in matters of importance than they are to follow the advice of the uneducated, because they know that education fits a man for any place, for taking the lead or for following others. But the educated man is more readily admitted among every class of people, they have ample opportunities for showing their minds with every species of knowledge, and they will endeavor to exert a good influence over their fellow-men. The farmer, the mechanic, and merchant, all give the student a warm welcome to their homes and while he is in their hospitable hearts he is making himself acquainted with their peculiar characteristics, habits, and his knowledge will be of benefit to him when he is called upon to fill some of the honorable offices which fall to the lot of educated men, in enabling him to wield a powerful influence over these classes of individuals. 2d. Knowledge is power. It confers power upon nations and individuals. The most powerful nations on the globe are those that contain the greatest number of learned men and where the most attention is given to this subject. England and the United States are the most powerful nations on the globe according to their size, and this fact is to be attributed to the attention that is paid to the education of the people. Why is it that England has always held the supremacy over the nations of the "old world," unless it be the possession of hosts of such men as Bacon and Palmerston, men of vast learning, who place a just estimate upon the value and importance of education, and also of the fact that it confers upon those who acquire it, whether nations or individuals. Such men are the sines of a nation's greatness, and as long as a nation is blessed with such learned men, and as long as the nation applies its knowledge to good and useful purposes, it will long will that nation be blessed with power and influence among the nations of the world. But that knowledge is power is easily proved by comparing the condition of Africa, a part of the United States. The one is a poor, ignorant, and degraded one, a country that prey to its unjust and avaricious neighbors, the "western continent." Now what is the difference? It is simply a want of knowledge on the part of the latter nation. The "sable sons of Africa" have never had the opportunities for gaining an education that the people of other nations have. Their eyes have never been gladdened by the sight of Colleges, Universities, &c., with the exception of a small portion of them, but they have been doomed to remain in ignorance, and Africa is becoming enlightened and the people are not far distant when the education which the people of Africa will possess will enable them to take a prominent position among the nations of the earth. So we see that power, science and happiness are gained by acquiring an education, while they are lost to a great degree by neglecting it. A consideration of all these things should lead the youth of our land to make greater efforts in cultivating their minds than they ever yet have done.

Brookfield, July 22, 1862. PIRRY.—The Chairman of the Hampshire Legislature opened one of his week: "I think every member of our House, O God, is in favor of a short session, and frequently manifest their approval for short prayers. We pray that the Lord will also conceive a love for short speeches, speak only when they have something to say, say it and then stop."

A boy at school, out West, was called on by his lesson in history who asked: "What is the German diet of the people of the boy replied: "Suet, lard, schnapps, beer and six comenrouce." The boy was pronounced instantly.
