Terrible Accident at Troy, N. T. FEN FERSONS STILLED, AND OTHERS WOUNDED. A sad - avoident 'occurred in Troy, by the giving way of the bank of a sewer which was in course of construction on a principal street. The Times save : 2-5

"The first syidence, of the disaster to those above ground was a sharp report, caused by the snapping of a brace and plank. Another gave way, then another, followed by the dull year of the ground as it swallowed its victime. Messrs. Jacobs & Caswell, contractors for Building the sewer, "who were both present, immediately set to work with all their force of men and a host of rolunteers to reacue the sufferers. One or two men who were near the surface hopped out at once uninjured. Others were rescued by a little digging ; but when a crowd bad collected and the painfal facts of the disaster were noised abroad, it was found that fifteen men had been burled in the landslide, and that; dead or living, they could only be brought to the surface by painful, laborious

" Mayor Van Alstyne took command of the - toilconstables and policemen who had assembled promptly, and by his efforts prevented a second avalanche, from the anxiety and curiosity of spectators. Soon a head was brought to light, and the man was found to belliving. A drink of water was given him, and he was slowly ungarthed. A heavy rain-storm began to fall, but still the work went on the soft earth rising from the trench by shovels full, and every possible effort making to rescue the men. "Up to two o'clock none of the men who were deeply buried had been rescued. John Shaughnessy, & well known laborer, was reached, with every prospect that he would be saved. He reported that there were two men near him, dead. Three br sklayers, on hearing the noise of the accident, took refuge in the completed part of the sewer, and made their way down to the river i City Surveyor Fuller was near the trench and had to run for his life. Mr. Akin was looking over the boards and estimates that there were over twenty men at work. Jacobs & Caswell's foreman estimates the number at fifteen. Of these only five or six are known to have been saved. It is hoped that the siding formed a sort of a roof that might protect them."

To Parents

Let every parent who desiges the welfare of his children read, and porder the following -suggestions on inconstant attendance at school. It is universally conceded by teachers that the evils of inconstant attendance are the most formidable ones with which they contend. It cannot be denied, that of all drawbacks upon common school efficiency, they are the most serious. Could parents see the evils of un-'necessary absence in their true light, there is reason to believe that they would be much less frequent than they are now.

Some friend of education has furnished the following, to which serious attention should be given:

1. If a boy learns to feel that he may leave his duty as a scholar for grivial causes, for causes equally trivial he will forsake his business when a man.

. 2. The time of the teacher and school is wasted, while his absence is being recorded. 3. The teacher's time is wasted in reading and recording the delinquent's excuse, when he returns to school.

4. He interrupts the exercises of the teacher, or some part of the school, in finding the places in which his various lessons commenced. 5. He has lost the lessons recited yesterday and does not understand that portion of to day's lesson, which depends apon that of yesterday ; and such dependence usually exists.

6. The teacher's time and patience, are taxed in repeating to him the instructions of yesterday, which, however, for want of study, be does not clearly appreciate.

We think to relieve the necessities of a famishing people. The ship sails, the port is reached, and the grain purchased and put on board. At the moment of starting it is found that the ship is unseaworthy, and that an outlay of $500 is required to put her in sea-going trim. But the master has no instructions upon this point. He has expended the moneys entrasted to him for the purposes specified, and finds no authority in his papers to incur any other expense. At this juncture, a man comes forward and proposes to put the ship in repair, on condition that the master shall forward to him a bill of exchange for the amount, on reaching the home port." The master sits down and considers the proposition. Conscience and common sense bid him accept the responsibility ; but a strict obedience to the letter of his instructions admonishes him to the contrary. So he sits halting between the letter of the law and the prompting of conscience and common sense. his crew becoming demoralized, and the cargo rotting in the hold. Mcantime. in the city, for the relief of which he was sent abroad, famine slays its daily hundreds, and the survivors, disheartened by the inexplicable delay of the expected ship, give themselves over to despair. At last the cause of the delay is made known to the famishing city. The authorities convene to devise a remedy. It is proposed to approprinte the needed sum out of the city treasury, and to levy a tax to meet the deficiency. To this Councilmen Tightpurse and Narrowmind object, on the ground that the burden of taxation is already great, and that the charter and the ordinances both fail to authorize any such special increase of taxation. The division widens, and between the demagoguery of Councilmen and the stupidity of the master of the absent ship, famine does its worst, and the city perishes from the list of cities.

This disaster came from considering a ques tion of existence as if it were a matter of dollars and cents. The intelligent reader will make the application.

We yield to none in reverence for the Constition, or in respect for the rights of the citizen. But the Constitution cannot countenance any course of proceeding which would convert it into a mere rope of sand, and so work the destruction of the liberties and immunities it was framed to perpetuate and secure. Nor can the rights of the individual be put above, or even on an equality with the welfare of the masses taken as a whole. A man has a right to creat a barn upon his village lot; but he has not the right to let it to a butcher for the purposes of slaughter house. He has a right to let his building, but not to create a nuisance. The exercise of the rights of the individual. then. is made to depend upon the contingency that
