[From the Boston Transcript.] ON THE RAPIDAN.

BY KATE PUTNAM.

The languid Southern night was faint With wafted breath of odorous bloom!
The heavy masses of the trees
Were clustered full of dewy gloom! Were clustered full of dewy gloom:
With slumbrous voice, a wak'ning breeze
To murmur to the leaves began!
Only the picket kept his watch
All night beside the Rapidan.

Hour after hour, his weary eyes
Had marked the torrent dart and gleam;
Had seen the shadows rise, and float
And vanish down the falling stream.
The moon peered through the leaves, and watched, With curious glance, the lonely man!
And still he saw the shadows toss Upon the rushing Rapidan.

He saw them, but he heeded not;
His dreaming mind was far away,
Where, through the night, the crested waves
Went flashing up the moonlit bay!
On rock and tree his gaze was bent;
But Northward; far, his quick thoughts ran,
To eyes that wept, an I lips that prayed,
For one beside the Rapidan.

The moon, that filled the Southern sky.
With glancing floods of silver light,
On distant plain and river poured
Her splendors through a Northern night! The very breeze that stirred his hair, Perchance her tear-worn cheek might fan. Slow dragged the night, in dreams like these, Beside the lonely Rapidan.

What sounded through the quiet air?
What flashed beside the hurrying stream? The waning moon's uncertain light Brightened upon a bayonet's gleam!
With breath quick-caught, and eyes wide strained,
He bent, the shadowed banks to som! So throbbed his heart, he scarcely heard The rushing of the Rapidan.

Ah, watcher by the lonely shore!
Thy moments glide with winged feet!
One prayer to Heaven, one thought for her,
Ere that true heart shall cease to beat. The light winds caught the murmured name—
A sigh along the stillness ran;—
A shot—a plunge—and onward rolled
The waters of the Rapidan!

DEACON THORNE'S DISLOYALTY.

BY SARAH A. DYER.

Evening closed darkly around the old farm house on the hillside-only a feint of light, where the western sky met the earth, telling of the glories of the vanished day. Through the dusky gloom came the glimmer of the lamps from the large kitchen where the family were gathered around the cozy fireplace; the deacon and his sons, together with George Stanley, a young neighbor, discussing politics; Minnie, his daughter, the rosiest and prettiest of village girls, paring apples quite contentedly; while in the background Mrs. Thorne sat, knitting, her eyes fixed on the beautiful forms which the embers were assuming.

The deacon was getting excited. His eyes flashed, and he spoke in hasty, angry tones. "Do'nt talk to me, sir! It is an unjust war, stitution of slavery, ordained by Jehovah, shall stand while time continues. Sooner than see my sons engage in it, I would follow them to the grave. Never with my consent shall they enter the ranks of the Union army." "Oh, father!" Jamie Thornton raised his eyes appealingly. For months this had been the grand dream of his existence. 'Twas noble, he thought, to suffer and die, if need be, for the liberty his forefathers bequeathed to their sons unstained. He was young and impulsive, and the tears rose to his eyes as he walked to the window and looked out into the night. "No," resumed the deacon, "my boys are not going to the war. I have done all in my power to discourage enlistments, and I shall continue to do so. The man who dons the federal uniform at such a time and in such a cause is no friend of mine."

"I am sorry, sir." George Stanley was speaking now. "For I feel it my duty to go. My grandsire fell in the old war of the Revolution, and I should despise myself should his descendants prove themselves beneath him in valor and patriotism. I could not stay idly at home and retain my self respect. I shall enlist; but I thought, sir, may be you'd give me Minnie before I went, we have been promised so long." The deacon answered him sneeringly:

"So you, too, have caught the war fever. I gave you credit for possessing more sense .-Mark my words, George Stanley, Minnie shall never be yours if you enter the army-never with my consent; and she dares not draw my curse upon her by disobeying me. A man who In the Court of Common is dishonorable enough to fight in Pleas of Tioga County, State deserves nothing but contempt." is dishonorable enough to fight in such a cause,

"I think you are too severe in your remarks, father," said Davis Thorne," in a determined Edwin Inscho et al. Dejectment for a tract of land in Deerfield township, county aforesaid, containing thirty-three and five-tenths of an acre or thereabouts, bounded and described as follows, viz: Beginning at the south-east corner of lot No. 8 in the allotment of the Bingham lands in Deerfield township aforesaid, conveyed to Caleb B. Smith; thence along lines of said lot north three-fourths of a degree cast eighty perchase cast tenther and the south of a degree cast eighty perchase cast tenther and the south of a degree cast eighty perchase cast tenther and the south of a degree cast eighty perchase cast tenther and the south of a degree cast eighty perchase cast tenther and the south of a degree cast eighty perchase cast tenther and the south of a degree cast eighty perchase cast tenther and the south of a degree cast tenther and the south of the s now that I have come to the decision, and I will not trouble you longer. Good-bye, mother, good-bye, Minnie," and Davis Thorne was gone.

The next day there was another change at the old farm house. Jamie had disappeared. All day long the deacon paced to and fro with clouded brow; and when at night word was brought that his pet son had enlisted, his rage was too deep for words.

"Never mention their names again," he said to his wife and daughter. "Henceforth they are dead to us. I have no sons."

The days passed quickly on, until the spring time scattered blossoms and fragrance all over boyish hand.

help you, mother. I know how you suffer." to enjoy.

After this the gloom on the deacon's face deepened, but he showed no signs of relenting. Another year of prayerful sorrow and patient watching passed by. Then came the raid into Pennsylvania; the raid which did more to rouse the latent spirit and patriotism of the North than the winning of many a victory. One evening a neighbor came hurriedly along the sandy road, and up the little walk.

"The rehels are coming, deacon," he exclaimed. "They're down at the South Forks; we have only time to escape."

"I think there will be no danger," was the cool reply. "At any rate, I shall stay and guard my property. The women can go with you, if they choose, although they will be as safe here as elsewhere."

Half an hour later a motley procession was wending its way over the hills, on the road to safety and security. Deacon Thorne bade his wife and daughter a kind good-bye, and returned to his post of watchfulness.

On they came, the minions of slavery, lighting their path by the lurid glare of burning houses. The deacon saw the flames bursting forth in gorgeous splendor against the sky, with a strange thrill of awe and exultation. "May such be the fate of all the enemies of slavery," said he half aloud. Nearer and nearer they came. Along the dusty roads the shouts of the advancing column. the tramp of armed men, and the crash of mus- bave been mustered into the United States milketry, were blended in wildest confusion. The deacon, alone and unarmed, advanced to meet township, ward, or borough, with the under-

"You are welcome," said he. "I have sympathized with you in your struggles; I am with county, city, township, borough, or ward, for the payment of such advancement and liabiliyou, heart and soul. All I ask is that my home shall be unmolested."

"Impossible, sir," answered the leader of the rebel column. "Our orders are to destroy all that lies in our path. It matters not on which side you are; your buildings must go to add to the bonfire which is lighting the souls of the hellish yankees to perdition." Calmly the deacon stood by and saw the torch applied to his bursting barns and granaries; but a quiver of agony passed over his countenance, as he saw the old homestead, the countenance, as he saw the old homestead, the home of his fathers, consigned to the devouring claims, with interest thereon until the day of elements.

Fire, fire! And the old house, from its ancient gables to its mossy sills, burst forth in a glare that lighted up the heavens for miles around. It was red, and rose on the billows of flame, then fell with a loud crash, sending up into the air a million fragments of lurid light Ah! a new home may arise from the ashes of the old-joy and love may gather round its hearthstone-but it can never, never be dear to his heart as that to which he brought his bride in her youthful beauty-in which his children have grown to manhood. By the side of the expiring embers, Deacon Thorne learned many a stern lesson; and when the morning sun looked down on the desolate hillside, which but the day before was covered with life and beauty, a man, true and loyal, in whose heart a vow of eternal enmity against the foul fiend slavery has been registered, welcomed its coming.

* * Gettysburg! the name immortal in our cou try's annals! All day the fight had raged fiercely, uncontrollably. Among the thousands of brave men who rushed forward to the rescue, none fought more earnestly and determined than Jamie Thorne. George Stanley was not in the fight; the ipsidious camp fever had struck him down in his strength, and in a distant hospital he was struggling against death. Fortune seemed to smile on the little hero Jamie. His comrades fell around him on every side, but he remained uninjured until the close of the first day's battle; then, as our noble, exhausted troops, who for so long a time had held double their number at bay, were compelled to lected: Provided, That in all election, or enfall back, a ball struck him and he fell. When, a few days later, his father, who had hastened authorities, as contemplated by this act, competo him, stood by his side, Jamie extended his one hand, saying: " Never mind, father, it's all for the country my other arm must do double service. And lected in such districts. now, father, will you give Minnie to George?'

Jamie rose from his easy chair, and laid his hand on the deacon's shoulder. The tall, pale soldier opposite, listened eagerly for the reply. "Forgive me, George, for the wild words uttered in a moment of madness," he said, humbly. "I am proud of you, my boys. What Davie's death begun, the rebel raid finished .--

It taught me how precious was the Union I had scorned. Minnie is yours, George; she is worthy of you. As for me, I have now an object in life. The country that I betrayed needs my of widows, minor children, and widowed moassistance. As the only atonement I can make there of non-commissioned officers and privates for past disloyal words and deeds, I shall enlist. Can't you bid me God speed?" Among all the brave men who have devoted their lives to the object of crushing this wicked rebellion, no one is more loyal and daring than he who writes his name, "Private Moses Thorne, aged fifty."

"ONLY A FARMER!"-A correspondent of Portland paper describes a debate in the Maine Legislature, on the question of granting a town ship of land to the Maine Wesleyan Seminary, at Kent's Hill, in the course of which a clergy man of some note made a speech, and illustrated the benefits of the institution by quoting the history of a young man who, through them, became a preacher, whereas, without the advantages of a seminary, he would have remained " only a farmer l"

"Only a farmer !" said Mr. Small, of Lyndon, another member of the House, "I am a farmer, and not ashamed to be one; and I am now asked to vote the means of elevating men so as to look down and sneer at me!" The bill did not pass.
