Some ten or twelve years ag), a boy and girl, as is often the case, were ame ig the scholars going to school in one of the townships a few miles east of Meadville. The boy, as boys always are, was rather dull and stupid, getting. as a natural consequence, miny a scolding, while the girl was very apt, and helped him with his lessons, as girls always will. He was very grateful, of course, and romised to pay her some day, "when he got to be a man." Notwithstanding this strange promise, time passed on as usual, and when he got to be a man the war broke out and he enlisted.

In the meantime, the parents of the girl that was the woman now, having become very poor, she was obliged to support herself, so obtaining a place in a good family, she came to Meadville to work. Last summer the young man was wounded and came home. Jest before his return to the army, having recalisted, he told her that he had never forgot an the promise made in his boyhood's days, as d he now wished in some manner to fulfil it; tist, he had not much to offer; only the third interest in three acres of land on Oil Creek; that he could not tell whether it would ever be worth anything, but whether it was or not she (light have it and welcome. The gift was accerted and the papers properly made out before he left.

About six weeks ago, the (ther two owners of the land having gone on to develop the territory a forty barrel well wis struck and she was at once offered $40,000 for her interest, one acre of land. The first intimation the family where she is living had of her good fortune was last week, when the gantleman, who, by the way, lives in one of the mest houses in the upper end of town, having hentioned that he had been offered $10,000 for, his property, was very much astonished when she made him the same offer, and said if the youse was sold she wanted to buy it as a home for her parents. Thinking surely she must be "laft," he made some inquiries, when the facts were found out, as stated above. .

If she does'nt "put on airs," and marries the soldier boy when he comes back from the wars, the story will be finished in a good old-fashioned way, and we will duly notify our readers of the sequel.

THE OLD HOMESTEAD .- Fati ire, take care to preserve the homestead. So s, preserve the old homestead. It will pay- es, if you build another. Think of it. Be sliw to sell.

Do you doubt it? Go to C sincy. You see the modest abode of the fath ir of the second President of our Union. Near by is the home of his son. Near by, that of his grandson; and not far off that of our present Minister to the Court of St. James. Ner py, that of the present J. Q. Adams.

Nor is the old home unprofi stile. The skilled tenant makes the soil productive to himself and owners. But there is a greater profit.-There is a retreat from the storms of life. It is safe. It is inspiring—rest. At it again.

Said the preserver of an old home in Bristol county, "It does me good to go and reviewold memories." Is he the only one who has been benefitted? Have the homes of the elder Adams and his dececendants no power to revive memories? to furnish incentives to great and noble actions?

Keep the homestead. Beautify it. Let the paint be fresh, the bails and rooms attractive, the old libraries cared for, trees flourishing, the walnut, butternut and apple. Every time posterity looks at it, they will hink of bygone virtues to be reproduced in children's children, and then produce them. Trees may die. Not family virtues.
