Miscellaneous. THE SILENT WITNESS.

I had spent some years in the west in the practice of my profession, and was on a visit to my friends in New England. Among those who came first on my list of friendship, was Fred Elliott, and I arranged to visit him as soon as I could.

I was just before dusk when the carriage left me at the house which had been pointed out as the one occupied by my friend, and which I at once recognized as the former home of old Timothy Elliott, the uncle of whom I have spoken.

Where had I been? What had I been doing? How had I been? Was I married? Did I ever mean to be? and a hundred more questions of like character were showered upon me before I had time to ask any in return.

At length the children were abated, and the mother soon followed them. I plainly heard her sob as she left the room, and a smothered groan which could not escape me, burst from her husband's bosom.

On the following morning I got away as soon as possible, for I could not bear to hear Hattie's grief; but I promised to come back again, and as I held her hand at the door, told her to keep up a good heart.

An uncle of mine, named Ansel Forbes, a brother of my mother, was in town on business, and I went to see him. He was a paper manufacturer, and worth a handsome property.

There was no will left, or, at least such was supposed to be the case; and it all came to me, as I was the only-blood relative living.

ing her no means, and she found a home with a brother, taking her step-son with her. In time she died, and the boy was left in my uncle's charge until he was twenty-one.

"Yes," he replied, "and it was given to me, and I took possession, and opened a flourishing business. Upon the strength thereof, I have entered society, and responsible officers have been put upon me."

"Well," said I, as my friend passed again, "what has happened to disturb all this?" "I'll tell you," he returned, starting from a moody reverie into which he had fallen.

"I'll tell you," he returned, starting from a moody reverie into which he had fallen. "You know that my father and Uncle Timothy once had a serious falling out."

When the hour of trial arrived it was announced that I should assist in the case. I took my seat with the counsel already engaged.

case in, and in a very few minutes we had the verdict. That evening Hattie hung about my neck, and blessed and thanked me until I fairly cried.

Master John Staffer got off to sea again; but Stephen Akers found his way to the State prison, where for a term of years, he was forcibly restrained from cheating his fellow men.

For our client we had nothing of clear, plain facts to help us. We had any amount of impressions and opinions in our favor.

"What is it?" asked Fred, who had noticed my emotion. I told him to wait, and then arose and looked around the court room.
