The Mexicans delabrate Whittentide by three tedays of fastival, where all sort sof games of chance take place-monte, roule to carde, dice, lowing amusing anecdote of a hene at a roulette sable;

On a Whiteunday, the first cle k of a considcraftic German house, whose as he I do not state, at I him afraid the present i spected head' of the firm might not be pleased at it, went in to his principal, who was engage in dressing, and seked for a funega—that is o say, a sum of one thousand pesos from his (yn salary)

"Most willingly, my Dear.B- -!" the principal replied, "but I must ask y u'to fetch the money yourself, as the cashier it away. Here are the keys of the cash box, in thich you will find bags of counted plastres."

The young man did as he was ild, and shortly after arrived with his bag of Loney at San-Augustin, where he selected the most elegant of the gambling houses. He west up to a roulette table and asked the banker while looking at him intently, and placing the bag on the green cloth:

"Will you accept my stake of No. 33?"
Con muchessimo gusto, cellero," the hanker answered, without kn ring exactly what the bag contained; but a dexican would feel ashamed to decline a wager. The ball was set rolling, and No. 33 won.-A slight pallor crossed the bat ker's face, for he believed, like all present, that young B---'s bag contained a funega, and as he stake must the paid thirty-five fold, this rade no slight amount. The bag was opened, however, for the purpose of verification of the banker, and the amazement of all present, when it was found that it was tall of gol; -1,000 ounces . instead of $1,000, or altogether 6,000 plastres ! Apperfect tempest broke out among the public. The most astonished of all, however, was young Bird, bimself, who was unable to speak through fright. The banker declared his inability to pay so fabu ous a sum, but, as is always the case on such roccasions, the public took part against him. It was found out that he was not the proprietor of the bank, but that a rich Mexican house supplies the funds, and was consequently responsible or the losses of its agent. After lengthened tu nultuary scenes which collected the whole town, the banker was sentenced by popular jurice to pay Mr. B the fairly gained sn's of 500,000 pesos. All the ready money in the house was handed over, and bills given for the residue .-Richly loaded, and accompanie i by a large body os friends, who acted as his escort, young re urned to Mexico. From the moment of winning, B---bocome a riddle to all of his acquaintance. In tend of participating in the merriment of hij friends, he was silent and thoughtful; at tights he even appeared affected by a species of melancholy. On reaching home he rushed a to his principal's

"Mr. L ____," he cried, breathlessly, "I have brought you your properts; here are 500,-000 pesos, which I won with; sur money."

It was now L-'s turn (be astonished, until B- explained to h n how, on this morning, he had taken a ba- out of the cash box, in which he supposed to 1 i contained 1,500 piastres. It was not until the bag was opened that he discovered, to his hollor, that he had taken 1,000 gold ounces inste id. As I should not have ben able to repay

- you, if I had lost, I have no right to keep my winnings." Much affected by the your ; man's honesty,

I clasped him to his heret.

Three days later, two circ lars were distributed in the city. The first aformed the mercantile world that Mr. B--- bad joined the firm of I-, as partner. The second announced to his friends and acquaintances the betrathal of Miss L- to Mr. B-, and in-, wited them to breakfast.
