SIR: Your letter of August 16th is received. In Sin: Your letter of August 16th is received. In reply I will say that as to the "underbanded double dealing" you speak of, at the organization of my Regiment in September 1864; I will refer to the honor and candor of the public. You say that some time in August 1864; I should be commissioned to command a regiment, provided I could raise the required number of men. Ten companies you say were tendered me, and now you have the audacity to ask who gave me the monopoly? It will appear from your own words that you previously understood mere about my arrangements as to the organizing of a regiment than I did myself. It noter invited you to join my regiment nor to assist me in raising men, but at your ment nor to assist me in raising men, but at your egrnest request, I told you if you did come I would do the fair thing with you. The testimony of my Quartermaster stands without contradiction; that which you introduce does not reflect upon it in the least. I find no fault with the testimony; those officers say they did not know of Wilson's appoint. officers say they did not know of Wilson's appoint-ment until a certain time; now the question is whether I was bound to promulgate all that had been said and done in relation to the Chaplain to all my officers, or whether it was sufficient to tell one, he beomers, or whether it was subscient to tell one, he being the principal operator in the matter, and this at a time when I had other business of more importance to attend to. I would like to have you state where you was when you told me that Reynolds would cartainly teme, in reply, to my request. The Quartermaster swears that this conversation was in your presence, for he safety you replied, and the officer that romarked to me that if the election of Roynolds was not legal then the election of Wilson is not legal, was ou and no other man.

The day after the election of Reynolds, I reported the whole proceedings to Aujutant General Russell; is informed me that all was correct except the choice he informed me that all was correct except the choice of Chaplain, which he said was not legal as the officers must be mustred to legally elect a Chaplain, and at the same time called my attention to an act which he said had just been published, which said that after the Field Line and Staff Officers were mustered the majority should elect a chaplain, and when Wilson came to me with a clear majority of one, I did approve their action, supposing them all mustered. You say I came back on my friends, who enlisted my mention me sake on my friends, who enlisted my mention me sake of the Colonel. You know full well that when I was chosen Colonel by the meeting at the European Hotel the vote was taken at my own request and it was made by the line officers unanimous, and I have always felt grateful to them for this token of respect, not with standing they could not have changed the matter in the least as to

could not have changed the matter in the least as to my being commissioned for I had received assurances (so who told you that I should be commissioned) from Gow. Cartin and General Enssell that U should be appointed, then do not attempt to infer that I was dependent upon the action of my officers for my place as Colonel; but how was it with yourself? The matter of calling a meeting was done by me at the suggestion of Gea. Russell, he said it had become a custom among regimental commanders and it would refleve me of some responsibility. I had a right to refuse this suggestion and to appoint all my officers except Chaplain. Now the question arises whether you was at my disposal or not, or whether I was deyou was at my disposal or not, or whether I was dependent on the action of my officers at that meeting for my position, as far as you are concerned. I did not desire to have you in my regiment for I had my suspicions of you ad being a contentions fellow, and in this I would do the full dimm with you you promised to missalwo companies but you never raised one.

If you had taken my advice you would not have brought Mr. Reynolds to the regiment, for I told you to your tace that I did not think it, worth, while for him to come as it had been four days since he had the displach. Our meeting was on Monday night the fifth, of September, and this conversation was had on the 9th and whether I understand Arithmetic or on the 9th, and whether I understand Arithmetic or not. I believe that 5 and 4 previous to the writing of your lotter and nine.

I cheerfully consented that if the officers that signed Wilson's paper had not been mustered to let the whole matter go before them for a fair vote in case Reynolds came on, but when you came to Harriffurg with him the regiment had been ordered

You say that the charges of Wilson were forwarded by me without his signature; that I was the cause of your being court-martialed, and I herewith introduce a true copy of the charges; specifications, &c., with

THE WIDOW AND THE POKER. Mr. William Woodhouse was naturally very timid man. Not that he was lacking in moral or physical courage, but that he was afraid of the women. On all other occasions the was usually equal to the emergency, be it whatever it might; but place him tete-a-tete with woman, and, to use a vulgar, but expressive phrase, he was done for. His mother had long ago settled down to the uncomfortable conviction that William would never marry and the girls had arrived at the | glad I am you told me!" same conclusion; it had become quite the thing to say, in making comparison, " As great a fool as Will Woodhouse. For-take note, bashful gentlemen-however much ladies may admire modesty in the other sex, they invariably despise a man who has not heart enough to say to the girl of his choice,

'I love you." Will admired all the girls in his way, but he looked upon them very much as sensible peoofficer doing resorted to means wholly unbecoming an officer doing agentleman.

That the said V. A. Elliott, Major of the 207th Reg's P. V. aforesaid elidewhile endeavoring to protect the names to said petition, make certain, false statements in order to induce said effects to sign the officers of the doing and officers to sign the time arrived at the mature age of twenty-officers of the doing ple do upon a hornet's nest—as a curious piece time arrived at the mature age of twentypienic party, Adelaide Browne. We believe, people with the stoniest hearts fall in love at pienics, and from that hour poor Will had no comfort of his life. Sleeping or waiking, his dreams were full of the beautiful Miss. Browne. Surely there never was another of the numerons Browne family like her! Blue eyes, white muslin dress, with knots of pink ribbon-brown hair, red lips, pearly teeth, snowy hands-all danced together in miscellaneous "all hands round" before his distorted vision. Adelaide, all unconscious of the trouble she had caused, went her way, breaking the hearts of most of the young gentleman in Highbridge, and trying hard to fracture the few that remained whole. She was visiting her aunt Hooper and it is an undeniable fact that ladies always take best where they are not known. This is no libel on the sex-no, indeed! for with gentlemen this truth is still more applicable. Mrs. Hooper was a widow lady, of no small ersonal attractions in her own estimation, and if she was not so young as she might have been, she thought she was, and behaved accordingly. She still affected short sleeves and profuse ringlets of glossiest black-though envious individuals presisted in it that her curls were made at the hair-dresser's. The same persons also believed that she was anxious to supply that place of the dear deceased as soon as possible. For a week after meeting with Adelaide. Will bore up bravely. The second meeting destroyed all the stock of composure he had been hoarding up. He took desperately to the Muses, and walked the whole night away, to the infinite destruction of shoe leather and the infinite disgust of his practical paps.

He met Adelaida now quite frequently.— Highbridge was very gay. There was a sing-ing school, a lyceum, a "society, and then the fine day, and there Will had the ecstatic pleasure of treading on Adelaide's dress, thereby throwing her headlong into a pile of brush, and while Laura Blake picked her up and helped her pin her flounces, he stood by frightened out of his wits, and momentarily expecting the mountain to open and swallow him up.

From that time he pined rapidly. His ap-petite was a thing of the past. His mother thought him in a quick decline, and dosed him with hearhound and Dr. Perkin's patent pills. He grew worse and worse. At last, thinking himself near his end, he confessed to his mother. She was thunderstruck at first; but afterwards, like a sensible woman, she advised him to put on his "tother clothes" and go right over and lay the case before Miss Browns. It couldn't kill him, she said, and then if she refused him-why, there was as good fish in the sea, etc. Will took three days to consider, and at the end of that time his mind was made up. He swallawed a double dose of blackberry cordial; donned his flame colored vest and black blue plaids, brushed his hair till it shone like ebony, covered his head with his father's ten dollar beaver, and made the best of his way to Mrsi. Hooper's. Not that he intended to ask Adelaide-but Mrs. Hooper. If he could only get the aunt won over to his cause, and employ her to state the condition of his heart to her niece, he should be happy. He felt assured that he never could live through confessing himself to Adelaide; and if he did, and she should say no, he was satisfied he should faint away right on the spot. As good fortune would have it, he found Mrs. Hooper alone, in her best gown and her best humor. She was charmed to see him, and treated him to huts and eider, and a seat on the sofa so near herself that Will was at his wit's end to frame the first word of his errand. They talked of the weather and the crops till the clack struck ten. The widow tried to make him think it was only nine, but he was not so far gone but that he could still count. He fall that the terrible moment could be no longer delayed; he must make a beginning: "Mrs. Hooper," said he, "I came over this and the widow edged a little closer and put her fat hand in William's. "Yes I'm in love, and I come to ask you if you would--"

"Will I? To be sure I will! How could you think otherwise! I have always thought so much of you! But it is so sudden! What would folks sav?" " Deuced if I care !" cried Will, elated at the prospect before him. "It's nobody's business.

"And you'll ask Adelaide, make it all right with her?" "Adelaide? Oh! she'll have no earthly objections-of course not !" "Are you sure? If I was only certain of it! Oh! Mrs. Hooper, I loved her the moment I set my eyes on her!' "Her? Who?" "Why, your, niece, Adelaide Browne. She is the only woman on earth that I could ever be happy with. I shall die if I don't get her!" Mrs. Hooper turned pale. She caught up the poker and flew at our hero like a maniac. He made for the door, she following close. "I'll show you how to insult a respectable woman!" she cried; "I'll teach you to steal the affections of a guileless heart and then prove false!" each "showing" accompanied by a thump from the poker. Will at last succeeded in putting the door between him and his antagonist, and in frantic haste he dived down over the steps, and at the bottom reeled full into the arms of Adelaide Browne herself, who was just returning from a friend's. "Don't let ber get me!" he cried; "I'd rather die than she should bug me again! It's you I love, not her, she's madder than a panther." It was not a very elegant proposal, but Miss Browne's self-possession insured Will's everlasting weal. She accepted him on the spot. for she had liked him all along, and nothing had stood between them but this abominable eeanluldead Will is a happy husband and father now; but even to this day the sight of a widow will make him tremble, they are so intimately associated in his mind with a poker.

THE STATE DERY .- A proclamation by Gov. Curtin, of this State, just published, exhibits the gratifying fact that the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, have reported a reduction of the debt of the Commonwealth for the year ending Sept. 4, 1865, of seven hundred and fifty five thousand, eight hundred and eleven dollars and twenty-six cents. This is an increase over the reduction of the debt for the previous year of $467,241 76—the amount reached last year being only $268, 569 50, owing to the expenses of the year being heavier than the year just passed, growing out of the war. The statement shows the affairs of the Commonwealth to be in good hands, and that with care and economy, now that we have peace, the State debt may be entirely paid off in the course of a few years.
