The trick is transparent and disgraceful and humiliating to both Stanton and the Court. If the Court had placed Thomas in custody, or, being in custody by order of a Judge at chambers, had entertained the petition for a habeas corpus and remanded him, the case would have gone to the Supreme Court of the United States by habeas corpus from that Court and the rules been heard immediately. This entire matter, the constitutionality of the civil tenure act, and have been finally adjudicated by that Court within the present or the coming week -But this was the very thing Stanton and the Chief Justice meant should not be done.-Stanton, when he had Thomas arrested, intended to make a show of appealing to the Court to adjudicte the matter, believing that the case could not be brought before the Su preme Court at all, or if brought before it, not of swift and cettain justice, he seeks to obstruct its course, and accomplishes his purpose by submitting to the base bumiliation of abandoning, by the help of his judical friend, a case which he instituted with so much pretense and haste.
