

Farm Garden & Kitchen.

Farmers and Agricultural men generally are requested to contribute to this Department, as it is from their experience that we hope to gain something of interest for our readers.

BREAD, BUTTER AND POETRY.

The Committee on Bread and Butter at the Worcester, Mass., Agricultural Fair closed their report with the lines given below, and though some may not forget all other accomplishments than the ones spoken of, yet there is a playful air in them worthy of a moment's notice attention. We do not know however, whether the poet was any more inspired than the necessity of his subject called for when he plunged the fair dairy-maid "elbows deep" in "meal and cream," but this would probably come under the head of poetic licenses:

The girl engaged in moulding bread
Shall make some sweethearts flatter,
With hope to get that dairy maid
To make his bread and butter.

She may not play the game croquet,
Or French and German supper,
If well she knows the end from when,
And makes sweet bread and butter.

In meal and cream she's elbow deep,
And cannot stop to put it;
But says if he will sow and reap,
She'll make his bread and butter.

The dairy maid, the farmer's wife,
Shall be the toast we utter;
Alone, man leads a crusty life,
Without good bread and butter.

CULTIVATION OF ORCHARDS.

During a ride through several of the western counties of this State, opportunity was afforded to observe the difference in appearance between orchards growing in grass and those subjected to cultivation. The foliage of the latter was marked with that peculiar rich, deep green hue, which indicates invariably a strong, healthy growth; the uncultivated trees showed the dull, light green accompanying feebleness and want of vigor. The difference was probably greater this year than usual, in consequence of the severe drought that has prevailed through the western part of the State. In young trees, which had been but a few years transplanted, the difference was eminently conspicuous, and it gradually diminished as they were older. But even in old bearing trees, a decided superiority was observed in the foliage of those which had grown in gardens, or other places where continued cultivation had necessarily been given, while the fruit was not only larger, fairer, and better but the trees were more uniformly productive. We could not but regret to observe, however, that nearly all orchards were allowed to grow up to grass—of course because some pains are required to plow among the trees of an orchard. Where occupied as a meadow, or with neglected coarse grass and weeds, the appearance was the most unfavorable; but where the grass was grazed short, especially by sheep, a much better result was obvious. The top dressing given by the droppings of the animals was doubtless an important advantage. Where the subsoil is of such a character as to allow the roots of old trees to extend downward several feet, the hurtful effects of a heavy crop of grass are not so great as when they are near the surface; but in all instances good surface cultivation is a great benefit.—Cultivator and Country Gentleman.

LAND OCCUPIED BY FENCES.

Mr. J. HARRIS, in the American Agriculturist, thus speaks of land lost by fences: How much land does an old-fashioned fence occupy? I have always thought it took up a great deal of land, but never had the curiosity to measure. But this summer we have been building a stone wall along the whole west side of the farm, and as it was completed, and the old fence removed, I was surprised at the quantity of land we had gained. The ground, of course, might have been ploughed closer to the fence, but taking the case as it actually was, the old rail fence, with stones, weeds, rubbish, etc., occupied a strip of land one rod wide. A field, thirty-one rods long and thirty-one rods wide, contains about six acres. If surrounded by such a fence, it would occupy a little over three-quarters of an acre of land. A farm of one hundred and sixty acres so fenced would have twenty acres of land taken up in the fence, and the rest would be in the field. Not only is the use of the land lost, but it is, in the majority of cases, a nursery of weeds, and, in plowing much time is lost in turning, and the headlands and corners are seldom properly cultivated.

TO PREVENT STORES FROM RUSTING.

A correspondent asks how to keep stores from rusting. One who speaks from long experience recommends common stove blacking, and no kind of oil but elbow grease. Much depends upon the condition in which stores are put away, and upon the place of deposit. If in a filthy, rusty condition, they will rust still more. If put in a cellar or damp place they will be likely to rust with any amount of polish. If thoroughly polished—the elbow grease not spared—and set in the garret or upper chamber, they will ordinarily go through without damage. But as rust is engaged in the manufacture of stove polish, and as servants that ply the brush are also mortals, we advise the house-keeper to look occasionally at stores not in use.

TO MEASURE CORN IN THE EAR IN BULK.

Rule: Multiply the length, the breadth and height together, in feet and tenths of feet, and multiply this product by 4, strike off the right hand figure, and the result will be shelled bushels.

FOR EVERY THREE HUNDRED AND SIXTY bushels of potatoes removed from our fields, the soil sustains a loss of ninety-two pounds of potash. Consequently, wood ashes is one of the most valuable of manures in the culture of the potato.
