THE VARIOUS KINDS OF MANURE.

Opinions vary much as to the value of different kinds of animal excrement, when used as manure. The dung of swine is prob ably the most powerful, The dung of sheep is generally of two kinds. That which forms the upper stratum of our sheepfolds is commonly dry and brittle, possessing little cohesion; while that below is more unctuous and of a different consistence-being decomposed. In any condition it is not suitable for elevated lands which are dry; but on low, moist, or rather wet lands, it is properly regarded as the best ameliorant that can be applied. When sheep dung is kept in a close heap and rather moist, it decomposees rapidly; but when not compacted, with a chance for its moisture to escape, the process of decomposition is more tardy. When applied to the soil or voied over the surface by the animals it decomposes more rapidly than most any other animal excrement, and produces more speedy and energetic effects. A too large application often, from its great ener gy, proves injurous to the crop, and pushes vegetation with an unhealthy rapidity, and should therfore be used in less quantitieus, both as regards weight and volume, than any other manure. From the excrement of sbeep, both solid and liquid, there is eliminated a large quantity of ammonia. This gas in not without its value to the farmer, of this we are not now prepared to speak. In preparing dung for agricultural purposes, it is well to mix it with a liberal quantity of some dry material which will absorb the volatile products of decomposition and become good loam, muck, refuse hay, straw, and other similar substances, are valuable. But whatever mateial is made use of for this purpose, it will be necessary to pitch the mass over frequently, and the more carefully this is done

the more valuable will be the manure when

The excrment of poultry—hens, turkeys, &c., though limited in quantity on most farms, is very energetic and of great value In its nature it is very different from the dung of quadrupeds, and appears to contain a substance which is mostly composed of albumen. Vanqueline analyzed dung and discovered a market difference betwen that voided by brooding hens. It bas been asserted by those who have experimented carefully with the excrement of fowls, and particularly that of hens, that in order to derive the greatest possible benefit from it, care must be taken to comminute it finely before applying it, and to apply it only to the searce without covering it up.-When it becomes necessary to use it as a starting manure, it should always be mixed with some qualifying manure-such as plaster, ashes, or common mould. This is necessary in order to abate its natural energy and cause it to probably act for a longer time. In compost it is probably the most valuable ingredient that can be used. A steep made of this sub-stance may be profitably used in irrigating gardens. It has sometimes been recommended as an infallable remedy for the various evils resulting from the ravages of the "striped bug," as well as from the at-tacks of various other insectiveous depredators-the attacks of which so often prove detrimental to certain plants. A very valuable artificial guano is made by a mixture of hen excrement, muck, and other articles; but care must be exercised in using it, as should not be placed in contact with either the roots or stalks, - Germantown Tel-

CORN BREAD .- One quart of corn meal TEAS. one pint of wheat flour, two eggs and a little salt, with sour buttermilk sufficient to make a very stiff batter. Mix thoroughly, and then add one teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in a little hot water. Stir this in and pour into well greased pans, sufficient to be one and a half inches thick when cooked. Place in a hot oven and bake until done, say half an hour. . Carry to the table hot. If all should not be used bake over again, and it is about as good as when first baked.

Some are shocked at the idea of eating drugs with their food, and exclaim against the use of alkali in cooking. Let such consider that acid neutralizes the caustic property of the alkali; and if they never eat anything more unhealthy than that, they will do well.

DIARRHŒA IN FOWLS .- The causes are a scanty supply of grain, which necessitates an excess of green food, or an unwholesome dietary of any description, are the usual causes of this complaint. The The treatment is simple; five grains of powdered chalk, the same quantity of rhubarb, and three of cavenne pepper, may be administered; and if relaxation is not speedily checked, a grain of opium and one of powdered ipecacuanha may be given every five or six hours.

REMEDY FOR COLIC IN HORSES-Give a half tumbler of spirits of camphor in a pint of warm water (cold will do); if not relieved in fifteen minuts, repeat he dose. Give nothing else. No bad effects, after and a sure cure.

Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable. healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of, fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a
