The years were swiftly gliding, But still I did not care : My heart was gay and happy, I yet was young and fair. And still my lovers sought me, Though they were on the wane; I'm sorry now, but really I'll never fiirt again.

At last all my admirers Dropped from me, one by one: My glass told me the reason : My rivals called me "fickle," And said I was "insane ;" I laughed then; but believe me, I'll never flirt again.

I'm not so bad I'm sure, now, For sense has come with years, And all my youthful follies Are paid for with my tears. An "old maid" now they call me ; It gives me grief and pain; What shall I do? What shall I?

THE "BEGGARS' KING" OF LONDON. MR. AND MRS. BLAIR AS THEY RIDE INTO WASHINGTON.

Everybody in London knows Billy Bottom. Four times up an four times down does he make and has he made for Six-andturning to retrace his steps at the southeast corner of Oxford St; and though constantly under the feet of the vast crowd that forever flows through the thoroughfare, or carriages that, from 2 P. M. to 6 of every day of the season, make it the gayest concourse in Europe, he has never but once been injured, and then not seriously. Billy is a strong built man, with brawny chest and muscular arms, his head phrenologically he gets into the city, his trowsers haveslipgood, and his face fresh as an Englishman's ped half way up to his knees. Mrs. Blair, should be in that equable climate at the age of forty-six; but he stands, or sits rather, for he was born without legs, only twenty- paste board slips, so that she can gather it seven and a half inches high. Strapped to a square board just large enough fo a seat (and which is part of himself) by means of two clamps, one in , each hand, he secures the means of safe, if not rapid, locomotion. He is as much a part of Regent St., as is the lion of Nor humberland. House, or the monument on Fish Street Hill.

Billy is rich. Of that there is no doubt. And then is the beggars' king. Once every year, on the fourth day of Christmas, or he 29th of December—for then, if ever, nual savings, the street-sweeps, tramps, vagrants, cadgers and prigs, are all well-to-do at the great gathering at the "Crossed held of the merchants fraternity within the metropolis for the adoption of rules to go. ern begging for the succeeding year, which meeting is followed by a dinner—Mr. Wil

A friend describes to us the appearance of old Mr. and Mrs. Blair as they ride into twenty years, his daily circuit of Regent St., Washington City. He is now seventy-eight starting from the Piccadilly Circus and years old, and his wife is seventy-six-They live six miles from Washington, at a country seat in Maryland, known as Silver Springs. Nearly every day they both ride into Washington on horseback; and wehn threading his way among the thousands of they do not come to Washington, they ride as far in the opposite direction Mr. Blair wears a broad-brimmed slouched hat, and looks like the relic of a century ago. He is very thin; his legs are hardly larger than ommon man's wrist; and, by the time who is a robust. fine-looking old lady, wears a broad Quaker sun-bonnet, made of all up in her hand, and a whitedimity short

Mr. Blair always rides about a length and a half of the horse ahead of her. He rides up to the steps in front of Montgomery Blair's house, throws the reins down on the horse's neck, dismounts, and proceeds directly up the steps. The horse drops his head and stands still. Directly, Mrs. Blair rides up, switches her busband's horse away, gets off her horse, and follows her husband into the house.

One end of this house is occupied by Montgoinery Blair, Mr. Blair's eldest son a graduate of West Point, once a Judge in Missouri, an office-holder under Buchanan, Post-master General under Lincoln, a friendly man, a firstrate later, and a very virulent politician and stump speaker; and the other end is occupied by Rear Admiral Lee, who married the only daughter of old Mr. Blair, and made ninety thousand dolhars prize money before he stopped the rebis from running the blockade at Wilmingon during the late war.

The mansion where Montgomery Blair lives, and where old Mr and Mrs. Blair alight as they ride into Washington, is the one in which Senator Benton formerly lived. It is situated across the street, in front of the White House and nearly opposite the War Department.

Old Mr. Blair was originally engaged in banking in Kentucky. He was brought to Washington by Gen. Jackson, between whom and himself a warm and life-lonfriendship subsisted.
