The Reward of Crime.

From the hour that the bad men of the South conspired to destroy the American Union, there has been a class of men in the North constantly as erting their admiration for the leaders in this conspiracy, and claiming for them extra virtues as gentlemen and superior qualities as soldiers. This spirit is aptly illustrated and the party denounced by the Putsburg Daily Gazette: in its allusion to the accounts of the surrender of Port Hudson, informing us that Gen. Andrews. who was deputed to receive the surrender of that post, magnanimously refused to accept the the Government of the United Stass an active sword of the rebel General, because he had defended it bravely. The propriety of this compliment will be better understood, when the pub-[ heers.] lic is informed that this same Gardiner was an officer in the Regular army, who, without even the grace or decency of a resignation, dishonored his sword, and p lluted his conscience. by abandoning his flag, and going over, without ceremony, into the ranks of the rebellion. The effect is just this-that the scoundrel, who is doubly dyed in perjury and treason, instead cf having his sword broken before his eyes, receives from the Government he betrays, a commendation for the stoutness of his resistance to the armed roll :e which has been sent to capture and has ry country. [Oneers ] him ! If he has deserved so well for his ucsuccessful villainy, because it was obstinate, what reward would have been great enough for him off he had succeeded in betraying, or capturing our aim)? It is a novel way of thus repressing should be given to the comfort and support of c ime. If an officer of justice were to deal in like manner with a burglar or murderer, it would be thought a little strange. There have been so many things, however, of that sort, in the course of the war, that it occasions 1 o remark. and is really looked upon as something rather creditable.
