

THE PEOPLE'S CHOICE FOR PRESIDENT. ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

HARRISBURG, PA. THURSDAY EVENING, JANUARY 28, 1864.

The Re-Enlistment of Volunteers.

When the American people first rallied to suppress the slave-holders' rebellion, the nations regarded the spectacle as the most sublime ever offered for their contemplation.

This language they might use, and with justice, too. But do we hear it from their lips? Not at all. They do indeed come home and invite and urge their neighbors and friends to take up arms.

Our neighboring township, Susquehanna, has had its quota filled two weeks since, and we hope that are two weeks elapse, the city will have its full quota in the field.

The Difference.—While Messrs. Ewing, Gamt, Field, Phillips, and others, who have taken part in the rebellion, are accepting, and urging others to accept, the President's amnesty proclamation, as something as liberal as could be expected under the circumstances.

James P. Barr, editor of the Pittsburg Post, who was elected Surveyor-General of Pennsylvania by the Democrats one year ago, has come to the conclusion that the only way to establish permanent peace in this country is to abolish slavery.

The Washington Chronicle publishes an article on the robbing of boxes sent to soldiers in the Army of the Potomac. The abuse is one of the most shameful descriptions and should be promptly remedied.

George Francis Train is making speeches in Nebraska. He described himself in one of them as "the best played-out man in the country."

The Diplomatic Correspondence.

The correspondence of the State Department with its ministers and foreign governments, for the last year, is remarkably interesting, so far as it has obtained publication, and exceedingly satisfactory.

Writing to Mr. Adams, on the 8th of December, 1863, in reference to the mediation movement of Louis Napoleon, Mr. Seward says: "It is now apparent to observing and considerate men that no European State is so really capable to do us harm as we are to do to it."

"No longer rests with this country to suggest remedies for this evil. All that could be suggested on that subject has been offered and reiterated." The whole case may be summed up in this: The United States claim, and they must consistently maintain, that in this respect she is a sovereign nation, and entitled to the same respect as such, that they accept of Great Britain. Great Britain does not treat them as such a sovereign, and hence all the evils that disturb their intercourse and endanger their friendship.

From another dispatch of the same date, it appears that Mr. Adams had previously been instructed to present demands to the British Government for reparation of the damage inflicted upon American commerce by the pirate "290," or Alabama.

"You have rightly judged that it is no part of the purpose of this Government to harass that of Great Britain by impatient demands for the immediate adjustment of the claims for pecuniary reparation.

On the 9th of March, 1863, the destruction of the ship Jacob Bell, with her enormously valuable cargo, calls from Mr. Seward this plain and significant language.

The recent capture and destruction of the Jacob Bell, with her cargo, valued at one and a half million, by the piratical steam vessel, the Florida, fitted out and dispatched from Liverpool, is regarded by the merchants in our seaports as indicating nothing less than a destruction of our national navigating interest.

But the plainest intimations and the most spirited language which we find in this correspondence, appears in a letter from Mr. Seward to Mr. Adams, bearing date July 11, 1863, and referring to the decision of the English Court in the case of the Alexandra.
