I do not say that the newspaper office ought to have been mobbed. I know not the ground upon which it was done, nor anything of it except the fact that it was done; but I do say that it is impossible for a free people, for a loyal community, to stand by and see and hear the enunciations which are made from month to month from papers, and not feel as if those things should be suppressed, and that it is dangerous to the welfare of the country that they should not be suppressed. It is only a wonder to me that this kind of mobbing which is spoken of has prevailed to so small a degree as it has.

I want now, sir, to ask another question or two. Have you ever heard of any paper being suppressed for praising the soldiers of the country, or for urging the suppression of the rebellion? Have you ever heard of any paper being suppressed for calling upon the young men and the middle aged men to enlist in the defence of their country? Have you ever heard of any paper being suppressed or any man being imprisoned for denouncing Jeff Davis? Have you ever heard of any man being imprisoned or papers suppressed for printing of the hanging of traitors for tearing down the flag of their country? Or have you ever heard of any paper being suppressed—and I will ask this of the Senator from Philadelphia—for refusing to negotiate with Jeff Davis? You never have, and you never will in this country. The idea of negotiating with Jeff Davis! The idea of making peace by going down upon our knees and saying to Jeff Davis, "What terms do you want us to submit to!" The idea of recognizing the man who is the head of an organized government, which is not recognized by honest men, loyal men, civilized men, or any class of men but barbarians!

And then we are met by the remark that we are disloyal because we sustain a President who refuses to stop war? "An Inhu man war!" And the implication of that remark is, if I understand it, that this war should never have been commenced, the implication of that remark is, if I understand it, (it was said in connection with remarks upon the language) that this war might have been stopped if we had negotiated with the traitors at the beginning, and that we were wrong in stopping arms for the suppression of this rebellion.

I have heard of no paper being torn out in 1832-33 which sustained General Jackson in suppressing John C. Calhoun, and there would have been none torn out on this day if General Jackson had had his way. I am permitted to say John C. Calhoun was a man who was willing then, I believe, to go down upon the plank placed before him, and I do not know that the word, which has sprung from him, North and South, has hung.

Then this glorious old Democratic party in its men and in its principles. Its principles being that the country was above everything else, and its men refusing to calculate the value of the Union. Now, they calculate the value of this great Union, they calculate upon the plank placed before them, and they do not know that the word, which has sprung from him, North and South, has hung.

This is not the time to defend Abraham Lincoln; but I must be permitted to say here, that having done all that I could as an honorable partisan to prevent his obtaining the position which he now occupies, feeling that I was sustaining principles which I had always sustained by voting for an endeavoring to secure the election of another man, I am prepared now to say—not that I esteem Abraham Lincoln a great man—but that he has done everything that I would have desired—but that, looking at Abraham Lincoln disinterestedly as the head of the nation, I think he has pursued the course which he has followed with an eye single to the best interests of the country. I do not say that better means than those which he had used might not have been adopted; but I do say—and I firmly and solemnly believe and am willing to meet the expression of opinion at a higher bar than the tribunal before which I am now speaking—I do say, that I believe that to the best of his ability and with the desire to save bloodshed—with the desire to bring back those who had grievously wronged their country, with the desire to secure peace to the country, when war had already intervened, and following up his desire to prevent war, his single object has been the welfare of the country. I believe him to be a true patriot; and I believe that if his power was equal to his wish, and if his wisdom was equal to his wish, (and I do not say that it is not,) that everything would be done in this country which the heart of the best citizen could desire. (Applause.) I believe that in any of the hotels or in any of the palaces, of which the gentleman of Philadelphia has spoken and into which desolation has entered—you will not find from any mother or any father, in any of these houses, a denunciation of Abraham Lincoln. If you will meet that mother in the quiet of the night, when she can do nothing but meditate upon her brave boy, whose loveless is made the brighter to her vision by the dark clouds that have come over in his death, and then ask her to denounce Abraham Lincoln for having led out the armies into which that boy went. She will weep; she will say, "My boy went into the service of his country, and love him as I do, I love my country more. No widow will denounce this war, though it has taken her son from her; and no father will say that Abraham Lincoln did wrong in calling out seventy five thousand men for the service of the country—nor in calling out three hundred thousand more, although their ranks come back without the son that he loved best upon earth." (Applause.)
