Wednesday Morning, November 7, 1860.

The Presidential Election.

The election yesterday throughout the country for Chief Magistrate was another of those sublime spectacles which the people of the Old World do not understand, and which bestows a privilege which is country as it should be. Nearly five among their number to rule the land.-With these people spread along the shores of two oceans, pursuing their avocations in extreme latitudes of heat and cold, making and proclaiming their laws in one language. yet transacting their business in half-adozen dialects, with varied interests, tastes and pursuits, yet firmly held together in the bonds of a union that is as strong and as holy as the ties of consanguinity, teaches a brotherhood and a unity alone by the force of religion, liberty and order. The history of the world does not present in the career of worth or political grandeur. The assembling of the armies of Rome, in her palmiest days, dwindles into insignificance when compared to the spectacle presented yesterday. Nothing in ancient or modern history is like unto it for force and influence, nor can we describe such an occasion better than to term it the real independent action of a free people, asserting the their will, quietly and effectually at the county at 1,800 1!

The result of the election yesterday is another subject which must strike the reflecting man, without any respect to the party he upholds or the principles he professes. The issues were elear and definite y defined. The contest was open and frankly conducted, so far as the Republican leaders were concerned, and the result now proves how much an organization can effect that is animated alone with a desire to do good, and a motive to secure the establishment of impartial principle in the administration of the government.-The two great issues of liberty and labor were the animating ideas of the contest. For liberty the Republican party struggled as men struggle for life and religion -while their efforts to maintain the rights of labor, were no less zealous or ardent. And the result, ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S triumphant election, proves that the sentiment of the American people is in favor not of the name of liberty alone, but of its practical operation among all men, and determined to make labor the standard by which to judge the merits of men, as well as recognize and protect it as the source of our national strength and wealth To establish this policy, the Republican party were refused a hearing in many of the States of this Union, but a majority in favor of the principle, and to day it is firmly established in the policy of the government, to be maintained there forever as a cardinal and imperishable doctrine of Republicanism,

-We have no time at this hour to particularize in referring to the result. Sufficient for us to know that Abraham Lincoln will be the next President. Sufficient for the present for the Republicans of Pennsylvania to know that the old Keystone State has done her whole duty in casting her electoral vote for Lincoln and Hamlin. The Union is now safe. Labor will be recognized and protected. Let us thank God, therefore, that he has so directed the judgment of men as to prompt Curtin last month. The Wide-Awakes them to right political action, as well as patriotic forbearance and fairness!

The Wide-Awakes.

The question is now asked, What is to become of the Wide-Awakes? The election is over, and the clubs which illuminated the country with their torches and made the welkin ring with their shouts, are now without present end or aim to induce them to continue their organizations. Such is the expression of those who could not appreciate the first formation of the Wide-Awake clubs. Those who do, will at once understand the ardor and zeal which animated the young men of the country, and induced them to organize clubs for the more effective promulgation of pure political principles. Instead of disbanding these clubs, they will be increased in numbers and power for future use, and held together by the development of politics as a necessary branch both of a social and a successful political organization. The necessity of keeping up these organizations is just as important after as it was before the election, and our opponents who felicitate themselves on the ity for Lincoln.

prospect of the disbanding of these clubs, will find their mistake before another American politics. Let the Wide-Awake clubs, therefore, be preserved in their organizations. This can be done at very ittle expense, by changing their parades and displays to meetings of preparation and discussion. Political societies formed for the purpose of discussing political subjects, will constitute as great an influence for Republicanism as ever was wielded by the Wide-Awakes, because it is by not so highly prized by the people of this discussion alone that our glorious principles can be made to penetrate the places millions of people peaceably assembling from which they are now banished by for the purpose of choosing one from passion and prejudices. In the club room, where free discussion would be encouraged, many a young man could be made the bold and daring orator who would proclaim Republicanism in every part of the land.

The officers attached to Lieut. Bond and Huron, Second Infantry, and Lieut. Berry, Second Dragoons, and Capt. Sully, had left the Pawnee agency. There were no Iodians there, they had left on hunt. The agent is dissatisfied that the troops were withdrawn for fear of an attack from the Sloux, and it is understood he has ap plied to Washington for a company of Infant ry to protect him. It is known here that the Sioux are also on their winter hunt, as both tribes are hunting on the republican fork.— It is hoped that they will meet there and set tle their difference to the satisfaction of them selves and the frontier settlements, by using each other up. The people of this frontier are greatly dissatisfied that the government should protect the Pawnees against the Sioux when it is notorious that it gives license to the former to commit depredations on the latter.
