The Adjutant Generalship. We notice that the name of Capt. John W. M'Lane, of Erie, is mentioned in connection with the Adjutant Generalship of this State. The Republican papers of that county strongly urge the claims of the gallant Captain, and represent that his qualifications for the position are unsurpassed. "He combines with natural taste for military pursuits, a thorough knowledge of the tactics and discipline which belong to the life of a soldier, and is confessedly one of the best commanding officers in the country. In addition to this, he is an earnest and active Republican. From the time when the booming of the cannon announced the nomination of Col. Curtin and Abraham Lincoln, to the day the people ratified their nominations at the polls, the Captain has been wide-awake all the time and everywhere." As commander of a Wide-Awake company he did good service, and deserves to be rewarded. No class of politicians have stronger claims upon the incoming Administrations than the gallant Wide-Awakes, and we feel assured that they will not be overlooked either at Harrisburg or Washington, when the spoils are divided among the victors.

The people should remember the proverb that "empty vessels make most sound." When the history of the present excitement shall have been written it will be found that those who figure the most prominently as disunion leaders are men nearly without property, and often without character, briefless barristers, disappointed politicians and others, depend ent upon making sensations for a support; men to be found in every community, the germs of a Cataline, a Csesar or a Marat. This element, combining with the uneducated poor whites, whe are extra loyal to their section in times of political ferment, makes all the noise diat is now heard from South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas. Correspondence of the Telegraph. WASHINGTON, November 16, 1860. It is not possible to write from this city, without alluding to the rumors which now agitate the country on the subject of the state ar disappointment has had time to effer. of public feeling in the South. This feeling, vesce, the excitement begins to subside, with its consequent ebulition of passion and and we predict that before the ides of threat, has served the purpose of supplying the flash columns of northern journals with ail sorts of exaggerated reports, until the unsoas a summer's morning," under the healthy phisticated reader actually imagines that this reaction that will take place between now glorious Union is on the verge of dissolution and destruction. That great excitement prevails at the South no one will attempt to deny, but that it is the result of any soundly conceived fears for the safety of the Union or an infringment of southern rights, is as far from the truth as are the reports of its extent and power.counties in Pennsylvania, except one, by Among the politicians of the South, dissolution which it will be seen that the old Key- or secession has always been a buncomb note stone is the banner State of the Union, with which to express their dissatisfaction and giving Lincoln the rousing majority of disappointment. Among the people, the masses nearly NINETY-THREE THOUSAND! The returns the original thirteen will lose by such a secesspeak for themselves, and we submit them sion, how they are to be remunerated by such a movement, and how they can be protected in their progress and development. The States formed from the territory of Louisiana, purchased from the French, in the event of a secession would be subject to a restriction of which they do not now dream. Pennsylvania has a right vested in that territory, which may 186 never subration of the states formed from it as sovereign. If the State of Louisiana or Arkansas should conclude to secede, none of the original thirteen States would be willing to give up the free navigation of the rivers of those States, or of trading without restriction in the ports of those waters, because they had purchased and paid for such a privilege. Here is a question that I have not yet seen agitated in all the iterations and reiterations on this subject, viz : In the event of the secession or any of the States that came into 169 the Union after the formation of the Constitution, and which were bought with the common capital and credit of the old thirteen States, how would each and all those thirteen States be protected in their investments made by such a purchase? I want to press the question on the flame of dissolution, and if we are to have a dissolution of the United States of the States of a dissolution of the Union, I desire that every State should be justly dealt by in a fair distri-bution of the wealth on hand, and the money invested in the territory forming many of the States that now so boisterously proclaim for disunion. And if we are to have disunion, let us have it now. The South has long used this threat as a bully threatens with a convealed weapon, and it is really time that the threat should be exposed. It is time that "disunion" and the people of all sections should meet face rattle snake or a lizard, the people should know it and then they could protect themselves and State should be justly dealt by in a fair distri-690 and the people of all sections should meet face 4 171 it, and then they could protect themselves and their commonwealths accordingly. A WOMAN THROWS HER CHILD FROM A CAR saying that with two months) time for weman resides.—Botton Herald. Cabinet. This is a fact which deserves at least built opinion, both at the North and the public opinion, both at the North and the south, a different complexion from that which is now wears. So far as this Administration is concerned, there is no longer any doubt of its complicity with the secession party of the South. There is no longer any doubt as to Mr. Buchanan's giving aid and comfort to every agitator who than this could not be expected from the man who created the first cause for the present diffi-culty, and he would indeed be recreant to all he not now lend his counsel and conceit to aid he not now lend his counsel and conc he not now lend his counsel and conceit to aid the measure of disunion. Such an event immediately following his exit from office, would crown with infamy his most infamous Administration, and end the corruption with which he filled the land, in a revolution of fraternal extermination. In Cabinet mutiny this man is reported to indulge in the most pathetic appeals for the rights of the South, appeals which elicit the contempt of a majority of his advisors, while they only possess the influence of moving the venerable Secretary of State, Gen. Cass, to tears. Out of Cabinet mutiny, the time of the President is occupied in increasing the fears of those around him and encouraging subordinate officers in the Departments to resign. Ridiculous as all this may appear to the reader, it is, nevertheless, true. It is a fact that the President is reduced to such small pendence, Carolinians feel the loosening means to gratify his nature for malignity, and it is a fact, also, that here in Washington this man is regarded with the disgust which was expressed for his official action by the people of the country at the late election.

The last threat of the Administration, to be carried out by the Democratic majority in the Senate, is contained in the report that every nomination which Lincoln may make for members of his Cabinet, of men from the South. will be promptly rejected. The motive for this is to make his Administration in appearance as sectional as possible, and on the idea of this sectionalism, so antegonize public sentiment as to organize an opposition party against Lincoln's Administration that will prove successful against Republicanism in 1864. You see by this programme that the Southern wing of the divided Democratic party can only maintain itself by the sectionalism of the next Administration, and in order to render the rumor of this sectionalism as apparent as possible, they intend to reject every man from the South who They were may be nominated for a place in Lingoin's INCOURTER | as can be bought in the State.
