What Should Pennsylvania Do?

In the present crisis the attitude of the State of Pennsylvania is watched with peculiar interest by the people of the and ample herds, as now; they never whole country, and in the midst of this were paying up their store debts more solicitude, as well as the suggestions of thoroughly. Ail the elements of prosthose who do not know the people of the old Keystone State, the question arises, What Should Pennsylvania Do? Shall she give up her integrity and independ- ticians to the judgment which the people ence in order to appease the wrath of a have rendered against them." few fanatics, or should she maintain both and let consequences take care of themselves, abiding by her ancient devotion to the Constitution as a justification for any position she may assume in the present from the Washington Constitution. After in every portion of the Union. Certainly Pennsylvania has as much to lose as any other State by a dissolution of the Union, be hereafter eternally subjected to the fluctuations, expansions and contractions of business growing out of periodical ebulitions of Southern passion and resentment such as now distract the whole country, because a union existing only in animosity and aggression had better be dissolved at once than be continued only for the creation of new wrongs and the exercise of increased oppression. If the whole country is to submit to the error of a particular section, binding its energies to the sloth of others, halting in the great path of progress to pander to ignorance and prejudice, and giving up all the rights guaranteed by laws both human and divine, then the Union had better be dissolved-the right left to its energies, the wrong allowed to waste its strength on itself, freedom be untrammelled, labor made free, and all things and all men equalized so far as their efforts prove their merits, and this jarring between free and slave institutions on this hemisphere would not last a month, because freedom would triumph as sure as the sun would illuminate its path to victory. In the contemplation of such a result we do not discern the awful effects of a civil war or mob violence. We do not mean to insist in violently forcing one section to submit to the demands of another, but we do doclare that the ment of the people of the whole country is opposed to the principle, the meaning, the spirit and the intent of the institution of slavery. But while thus being opposed to an institution which has become interwoven with the social condition and existence of a large class of American citizens, we must see that the rights of this class are not infringed, that their possessions are not destroyed; and that their property in whatever shape it appears is and that Presidents have no right to reliables corn coming forward; 2,000 bushels old not given up to the ruthless ravages and verse the judgment of the masses by abless of those who now appose clavery is arriving freely; 500 bbls. sold at 19@20c. loose uses of those who now oppose slavery dication. as a moral as well as a political evil. To do this, it is not necessary to grant any new guarantees to the Southern people, ple of Pennsylvania should make any new concessions. All that is needed is the repeal of any law which encourages the nullaw, however much such law may be repugnant to our conceptions of right .-enterprise of the people of Pennsylvania are not prepared to make, while it would he only lowering its sovereign dignity as a commonwealth thus to acknowledge before the world its weakness.

The Political "Panic,"

Our readers will be glad to learn that the "panic" gotten up by the defeated politicians and stock gamblers of New York, is about "played out." We have corrections rendered necessary by the facts as they have anneared: all along insisted that there was no real foundation for the financial crisis inaugurated by the treason pletters of Wall street. As the Tribune truly remarks, "the country as a whole was never before so rich and strong as it is to-day. Its cattle and grain are worth millions on millions more than were those of even one year ago. We have as much specie as we over before had, and twice as much as we had at any time prior to 1850. True, we dred million's worth of grain and meat, cotton, tobacco, etc., just ready to be shipped to markets where all will be taken at good prices. The outward flow of specie is just ceasing, and a strong inward current is certain to set in before coln on that account in any other light. New Year's Day. Our Northern and Western farmers never before had such full barns and granaries, such large stacks perity and industrial activity are ample beyond precedent; the one thing wanting is a loyal submission by the defeated poli-

The Latest Compromise.

The latest and coolest proposition of compromise between the sections comes heated and excited state of public feeling asserting that no declaration of conservatism from Mr. Lincoln can calm the storm; that the South has deliberately made up its mind not to believe, though one rose but she had better lose her all now than from the dead; it proceeds to announce its grand panacea as follows:

Another and a more decisive way is open to Messrs. Lincoln and Hamlin. By one bold stroke may they remove the difficulties and avert the danger. Let them resign their positions. Let them abandon their title to the offices with which their names are associated. Let them formally withdraw their pretensions from the college of electors. The step will not be pleasant, we confess. No one likes to have the cup of joy dashed from his lips. But, in the present case, circumstances will mitigate the mortification; for, since Mr. Lincoln cannot, in all like lihood, be more than the President of a broken Union, comparatively little philosophy may reconcile him to the sacrifice. He is simply called upon to give up gracefully what he can-not keep peacefully or usefully. The Chicago interview will show whether his disinterestedness is equal to the occasion. We shall anxiously await the revelation of the course resolved upon by Mr. Lincoln and his official partner. Will the telegraph for once talk sensibly?

The way, then, to vindicate the perpetuity of this Republican government, is to deny the right of the majority to rule; and to pass over to the hands of a divided and confessedly treasonable minority the power which the organic law places in the hands of the people at large. The bare supposition that Messrs. Lincoln and Hamlin have the right, even had they the will, to reverse the verdict uttered by the majority of the people, is monstrously absurd. Mr. Lincoln is not the master, nor the dictator, of the Republican party. He is the servant of the people; they have employed him for four years, and he must work out his time. The Constitution is edited by a foreigner. Whether he is not a naturalized citizen we are not sure. But it is very evident that he has a small conception of the spirit of our institutions. An education in a Pennsylvania district school would have taught him more of the fundamental principles of our free govern- $51,000. ment than he now knows; for there he would have become imbued, infused and saturated with two ideas. The one, that the majority must rule. The other, that the rulers are the servants of the people; and that Presidents have no night to majority and that Presidents have no night to majority and white at $1 25@1 35. There

Minority Presidents.

There is a great deal said just now in the nor is it necessary or proper that the peoa President elected by a minority of the popular sold; mixed yote should not be submitted to, did not take dull at 19½c. before. Our fathers submitted to it as early as 1824, and we have repeatedly submitted to it lification of a law of the United States.

Let Pennsylvania prove her devotion to the Constitution by enforcing its proviwas so, our more than his whole vote—an unprecedented event in the history of this Government, and the like of which has not occurred since. The country did not go to rack and people of the South that we are loyal to notwithstanding there was a popular majority against him of nearly 30,000 in a total vote of 2,500,000. The country did not go to rack and ruin in 1848, when Gen. Taylor was elected What more could be granted—what more should be granted? The granting of any new security would be the admission of a Pierce was elected by an overwhelming popular majority and many presume to this day to weakness which the mighty energy and lar majority, and many presume to this day to assert that Pierce had several hundred thousand majority over all; whereas, the fact is, he had only 58.869. The country did not go to rack and ruin in 1852, notwithstanding an Old Pub. Func. was chosen President by a vote of 377, 629 less than the votes against him, nor will is go to ruin now on account of Lincoln's election.
We frequently notice puragraphs claiming that Lincoln has received only one third of the popular vote of the Union. This is a great mistake; Mr. Lincoln has received within a few thousands of two millions of rates are the second of the popular vote of the Union. thousands of two millions of votes, and a much larger number than any President heretofore elected, ever received. We have compiled the following table, taken from the estimates of votes published in the Baltimore American, with

An Indignant Wife's Retaliation upon a Free-Love Husband.

The Cleveland (Ohio,) Plaindealer relates this story in its usual elegant (?) style : Anjinfluential man, who resides near Cuyaho ga Falls, has been absent from home a good deal during the past year. He told his wife he went off to buy cattle. He never brought any cattle home with him, and his wife wondered what under the sun' he did with them. Women are generally sharp. It perhaps has never oc-curred to some people, but women know a few things. And this particular woman, in the course of time snuffed a large mice. She posi-tively ascertained, indeed, that her husband was mingling with loose crinoline in several ad-ition, places and that this wine cattle? cent places, and that "buying cattle false and wicked pretext. She was indignant, but she did not arise and howl. On returning from a cattle-buying ('in my mind's eye Horatio')' tour, not long since, the man was rather surprised not to find his wife at home, and was accomplying the man was rather surprised not to find his wife at home, and was somewhat more surprised to learn that she had been absent for three days, and was a good deal more surprised to learn that she had more surprised to learn that she had gone on with a man with black whiskers. He started in pursuit. He scoured the country round.—

At last he met her. She was in a buggy with Mr. Whiskers. They were returning home.—
"Where in — have you been, Maria?" Mr. Whiskers. They were reutiful nome.—
"Where in —— have you been, Maria?"
shouted the husband, boiling with indignation.
"Oh, I've been off buying cattle!" she sweetly replied, while Mr. Whiskers lashed the horse into a furious pace, and they dashed away. There was a reconcilliation, but we do not know how it was brought about, but of the truth of the principal features of this item there is no doubt. The man don't go off buying cattle now-a-days. Spurgeon's Opinion of Garibaldi-

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in a recent letter to the Watchmen and Reflector, draws the following moral portrait of Garibaldi; God save Garibaldi! A thousand benedictions upon his noble head! One such man redeems the age from the shame of littleness !-There is greatness enough in that one man to ennoble the century that begat him. We do not live, after all, in the age of diluted virtue and departing manhood. Never Roman toga hung about a hero more glorious than he who wears the red frock. In him the poverty of Cincinnatus is combined with the integrity of Fabricius, the truthfulness of Regulus with the self-forgetfulness of Curtis, the valor of Scipio with the pain-delying her see of Scavola. If all the marvels of patrion and forgotten, they might be re-written from the life of this one Italian. His portrait differs from that of any other living mortal, and seems to be the exact ideal of a patriot warrior's face, yet is there a gentleness gleaming from it which must mean more than words and guns can ever help him to reveal. O that the God who raised up Cyrus and surnamed him, though he knew not, may also give the enemies of freedom as driven stuble to the sword of Garibaldi, and give to the warrior himself a name and a plac among the soldiers of the Cross.
