FROM THE FEDERAL CAPITAL

[Correspondence of the Telegraph.] WASHINGTON, Feb. 9, 1861. The news from Montgomery, Alabama, the seat of the Southern Rebel Congress, informed the people of the world that one Jefferson Daws had been chosen President, and A. H. Stephens Vice President, of the redoubtable Southern Confederacy. This distinguished honor is to last one year, provided in the meantime, that must respectfully demur to his claim to be the aforesaid Confederacy is able to maintain an "honest man;" that in their latitude a its position before the nations of the world.-Both gentlemen have accepted, and both will he had been guilty of would not be recog- to extend the treason which they represent, as well as enlarge the mischief and horrors that zes the Central Government at Washington to that as he had rendered himself personally that class of men who consider themselves been if he ever came to New York they would are opposed to the recognition of labor as an accommodate him with rooms in Eldridge influence of good in the government, proving street jail until he paid what had thus their opposition by a fierce and constant defence of Slavery. The term of one year handy been adopted, doubtless, to satisfy the author tions as well as ardent sons of the South given in charge of Mr. Lamar. or it has been limited because the leader of the insurrection have little faith in their power to support a government beyond that period. They also adopted the Constitution of the United States, with some slight amendments, such as opening the African slave trade, property qualification in the franchise the restriction of the franchise only to native ultimate subversion or destruction of the rights, liberties and privileges of the people. The election of Jefferson Davis is a ruse, as well conceived and perpetrated as was the election of Louis Napoleon.
