Saturday Afternoon, March 9, 1861.

Public Lands .- In a commendatory notice of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the National Intelligencer remarks: "It is not perhaps generally known that the public lands of the United States embrace an area of nearly three times their extent at the ratification of the definitive treaty of peace in 1783 with Great Britain, and more than two-thirds the geographical extent of whole country. The Department which manages this immense territory, with the multitudinous interest it involves, is one of the most important in the Government, and requires the highest executive abilities. What an incalculable labor surround the discharge of public duty, it must is the mere survey of a billion of acres yet be discharged. of land, extending over every variety of surface-of hill, swamp, plain, and valley public domain, and which, with all our an, as follows: industry, is only as yet partly completed. is now engaged, day after day, and through every season of the year, in carpensable part of the public service; and explosion of some subtle poison. energy is evident from the fact that duracres were surveyed and prepared for market."

VIRGINIA CONVENTION .-- The speakers of the Virginia Convention appear to be for measures of immediate secession others are desirous of preserving peace, and both parties are interpreting the views of the President according to their peculiar opinions. Mr. Carlisle approves of the tone and spirit of the inaugural, and regards them as pacific. He is opposed to any movement of the Convention, that will carry Virginia against the federal government. Petitions have been received by the Convention from Lynchburg and Goodson, urging immediate secession .-Others will, doubtless, be presented on the other side. Virginia has been so long conciliatory and desirous of peace, that it is likely she will not be easily moved from her position. Success to her mission of

"Disorder and confusion may indeed arise scenes of commotion and contest are threatened and perhaps may come. With my whole heart I pray for the continuance of the domestic peace and quiet of the country. I desire most ardently the restoration of affection and har-mony to all its parts. I desire that every citizen of the whole country may look to this government with no other sentiments but those of grateful respect and attachment. But I cannot yield, even to kind feelings, the cause of the Constitution, the true glory of the country, and the great trust which we hold in our hands for succeeding ages. If the Constitution cannot be maintained without meeting these scenes of commotion and contest, however unwelcome, they must come. We cannot, we must not, we dare not, omit to do that which, in our judgmen, the safety of the Union requires.

Correspondence of the Daily Telegraph. WASHINGTON, March 9, 1861. The debate in the Senate, yesterday, on the subject of the inaugural, drew out Senator which Mr. Madison wrote to him, "it Douglas in a series of strictures which gave crushes nullification, and must hasten the great offence to Southern Senators. Mr. Dougabandonment of secession"—held this las declares that the inaugural is pacific, conciliatory and encouraging, while some of his colleagues, Mr. Mason, of Virginia, among the most prominent, insist that the President means only coercion, when he talks about enforcing the laws, while any attempt on the part of the Federal authorities to collect the revenues, will inevitably lead to war and bloodshed. Mr. Mason interprets the inaugural as a warlike message, because it espouses the law. Here we have the Democratic estimate of the policy of the present administration, from which there will be no receding on the part of those whe are preparing to oppose and embarrass our progress towards the adjustment of our difficulties. The juncture of affairs certainly demands some action, whether it be pacific or warlike; and unless the administration proceeds at once to harmonise the differences and crush thé rebellion, the nation can expect nothing but confusion and dismay. Already has the 'Southern Confederacy' assumed the form and dignity of a separate government, and so far the rebellion has been a success. It presents itself to the world and asks for recognition with as much assurance as any of the other nations, and it now remains for Abraham Lincoln to decide whether there shall exist two separate forms of government where only one prevailed. Every sensible man must admit the obvious necessity of such action on the part of the old government. Longer delay is ruin to all concerned. Prompt action will decide the issue and either restore harmony among the belligerent States, or establish the right of coercion, and at once inform the world that there is neither security or stability in our present form of republican government. If the States that are out of the Union be suffered to remain in opposition, before many months we WINFIELD SCOTT.—The position of this federate States. If the Mercury's is the can expect to hear of some of the Western States leaving because they consider the Tariff laws onerous and burdensome--and thus from fallacious causes to mean excuses, one State after another will be breaking from this compact, until this whole hemisphere becomes a grand scene of antagonism among contending and belligerent commonwealths. As the case now stands, such a result must surely follow as a natural consequence. It is denied that the Federal Government has any authoriity to use force. That an attempt to collect the revenues would be the use of such force. What, then, is to be done? Persuasion will never bring South Carolina back into the Union. Conviction will not nullify the temper of Jefferson Davis. Concession cannot reassure the confidence of any of the secessionists. Therefore, Abraham Lincoln must either enforce the law with the means at his command, or he must recognize the independent action of the seceding States. He must call on Congress for men and money, or he must permit Major Anderson and his gallant band to starve. He must either permit these men to be ingloriously withdrawn or be reinforced-and when the ment against the admission of that Ter- attempt to reinforce is made, the act will be ritory as a State, to be followed by her deemed a declaration of war. For the Supreme Bench we want younger men and men of more vigor and activity. The complaint now is, that the great age of many of the justices on that bench renders them unfit for the perplexities and harrassing duties of their position. If we fill vacancies by appointing men of equal age, the Supreme Bench must soon become utterly incapable for a lack of vigor, strength and endurance. So far as Mr. Crittenden is concerned, the country owes him much. He has earned the gratitude and praise of his beneficial to the country, than by elevating
