The Victory of Mrs. Gaines.

In view of the celebrated case which was recently decided in favor of Mrs. Court of the United States, the New York Times furnishes a brief review of its material facts, which will no doubt interest our readers at this time. Daniel Clark, who was one of the early settlers in the colony of Louisiana, was a very remarkable person. His sagacity, prudence and business tact soon placed him at the head of its monetary world, while his beauty of person, popular character, and agreeable manners afforded him a similar position in the social circle. In 1802 he became acquainted in Philadelphia with a lady of extraordinary personal beauty, named Zulime Carriere. She coronet, married her, and then disclosed the astounding facts that he was a confectioner and a bigamist. Zulime appealed for protection to Clark, who, being warmhearted and chivalrous, at once espoused her cause, and after becoming convinced that De Grange had another wife living, married her himself.

The marriage was kept secret, and in 1806, Myra, now Mrs. Gaines, was born. Being naturally desirous of having her connection with Clark a publicly acknowledged one, Zulime went to New Orleans to obtain legal proofs of her first husband's rascality. While she was gone, Clark, who had grown into an influential politician became enamored of Miss Caton, a grand daughter of Charles Carroll, with whom he had contracted an engagement, of the people of the State. If it is not done, a grand daughter of Charles Carroll, with though when reports were brought to the question of the right of the people to form their own Government may require practical Miss Caton, alleging her lover's marriage solution before the new order is fully establishwith Zulime, she at once insisted upon a release from the engagement, and she subing. It is evident there will be trouble, if the isting circumstances, and until the American Government learns properly to wield the power sequently became the Marchioness of Wellesley. In the meantime Zulime had returned to Philadelphia and sought to contain proofs of her marriage with Clark who had, with singular treachery, destroyed all that he could discover. Finding herself helpless, in a strange country, and with a child dependant upon her, and with a child dependant upon her, she was wholly at a loss what to do, and in her destitution, driven almost to despair, she accepted the hand of Dr. Garapair, she acc on hastening to find his former love, ascertained that she was the wife of another. | stand thus: He took the child, Myra, and placed her Republicans..... 102 | Democrats.......54 under the care of a friend, and had her most liberally educated. Zulime lived for a long time after that, attained the age of seventy-eight years, and died at New Orleans but a few years since. Clark, whose business talent was proverbial, amassed an immense fortune in Louisana, Missouri, Kentucky and Maryland, which he bequeathed by will, in 1813, to his mother, Mary Clark, naming Beverly State. The Convention has also endorsed Chew and Richard Relf, bankers of New Orleans, as executors. Charges have been preferred against the executors of bad faith and mismanagement: but however that may be, Myra-then Mrs. Whitney-baving discovered at maturity that her mother had been the wife of the honorable affection for which she cannot be too highly praised, determined to assert her right as the legitimate child and
