dier named James Arnold, from Reading, a member of Capt. Rausch's company, was seriously wounded by the accidental discharge of a pistel in the hands of a companion. The ball struck him in the back directly below the left shoulder and passed through into the breast. The affair happened in Mr. Keet's daguerrean room, and the unfortunate man was immediately taken to Dr. Seiler's office where his wound was dressed. Owing to the faint condition of Arnold, from the effects of the wound and loss of b cod, the Doctor was unable to extract the bullet, which remains in his breast. He was subsequently taken to Camp Curtin. His recovery is considered doubtful. The soldier who discharged the pistol is very greatly distressed.
