A REBEL WAR VESSEL SUNK BY THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Thirty-six Prisoners Brought to Philadelphia. FURTHER INTERESTING DETAILS

PHILADELPHIA, August 7. The United States Gun Boat Flag, Commander Sartori, (formerly the Phineas Sprague.) arrived off the powder magazine, at Fort Mifflin, this morning, from Savannah. She brought thirty-six pirate prisoners, taken from a rebel vessel of war off Charleston, on the afternoon of the 1st instant. The rebel craft was sunk by a broadside from the United States trigate St. Lawrence. Five of her men were drowned, but the remaining thirty-six saved, and are now prisoners.

They were put on board the Flag, where they have been heavily ironed and under a constant guard. We are informed that they are a villainous looking set of fellows. The vessel that was sunk was formerly the United States revenue cutter Aiken, that was seized by the secessionists at Charleston, last November.

The officers of the Aiken evidently did not understand the character of the St. Lawrence. She came boldly out of Charleston harbor, and fired two shots at her. The St. Lawrence returned the fire, and at the first discharge sunk her, resouing most of those on board, as we have already stated.

The Flag, which brought the prisoners to the Delaware, sailed from the Philadelphia Navy Yard last May, since which time she has been cruising off Hampton road, "Charleston and Savannah," overhauling vessels and chasing their steamers when attempting to come out, &c. She had a skirmish with one on the 27th of last June, off Tybee Island, causing her to beat a hasty retreat after receiving a broadside of shell. The officers and crew are all well and to the Union many ready to return as soon as necessary repairs are finished. The following is a list of her
