A SOLDIER POET.—We seldom find space in our local department for poetical effusions, but the following little poem is so remarkable for its beauty of rymth, richness of melody, and purity of sentiment, that we are constrained to give it a place in our columns. The writer's thoughts float along one after another as easily and gracefully as a line of birds in autumn flying southward, while the verses are as free from effort and affection, and as beautiful as the motions of happy children at play. The author

At midnight, on my lonely beat, When shadows wrap the wood and lea,

A vision seems my view to greet
Of one at home who prays for me.

No roses blow upon her cheek-Her form is not a lover's dream— But on her face, so kind and meek, A host of holier beauties gleam;

For softly shines her silver hair; A patient smile is on her face, And the mild lustrous light of prayer, Around her sheds a saint-like grace

She pleads for one who's far away e soldier in his holy fight— And trusts that Heaven in mercy may

Protect her boy, and bless the Right. And although leagues lie far between, This sweet communion of the heart Steals o'er our souls with breath serene,

And we no longer are apart. So, guarding thus my lonely beat,
By shadowy wood and haunted lea,
That vision seems my view to greet
Of her at home who prays for me.

A CRUEL exchange says that with washing and sewing machines, baby-jumpers, Irish waiters, big hotels, &c., we shall soon have no necessity for women, whatever. Perfectly absurd. Why, there is one particular in which we insist that no substitute can be obtained; even with the brilliant inventive genius of the age. We allude to courting, of course—a luxury which, our fathers tell us, is not enjoyed now in as much perfection as it "used to was" in the good | 8 old times, owing to the improvements of fashion, and the fastidiousness of "society." We were early upon the ground fully prepared with book and pencil to jot down the items" for the benefit of our readers, but were prevented from getting a favorable positionf or this purpose by a stalwart sentinel, who, acting under orders, kept all except a number of the personal friends of Col. THE INDIAN SUMMER.—What a habit the poets have of praising the Indian Summer? And yet how few recognize that season when it really comes! Most men imagine it visits us about of local trade, and is now little more than a a month earlier than it actually makes its appearance, and so they worship the ghost of that delicious period which we all look to enjoy before the rude voice of winter bids the autumn hence, and closes the almanac upon all his own programme of entertainment.

The Indian summer always seems to us like the gorgeous sunset of the year—its hectic flush is so beautiful. The consumptive year seems, at that time, to put forth all its vital energies under the floor of the engine, immediately be- and sisters, or heirs in general receive the anew, to array itself in its more coquettish cosamount due.
