The South Carolina Coast.

The news brought by the Monticello, that the fleet was seen near Bull's Bay, naturally turns the eyes of the public to the South Carolina coast, of which that is one of the few important coast, of which that is one of the rew important harbors. The coast of South Carolina is not very accessible to vessels of any but light draught. The fact that the fleet was seen off Bull's Bay does not at all make it certain that Commodore Dupont and General Sherman in-end to make a landing there. Yet it is quite possible, if an attack on Charleston is intended, that a part of our forces would be landed in Bull's Bay, which is about thirty miles from the rebel city; while amother part mould be landed at Ston which lies a few miles to the south of Charleston barbor.

PORT ROYAL. The harbor of Beaufort or Port Royal is the best in the State, and is about equi-distant from Charleston and Savannah. It is but little frequented, but has a good draught of water and is large enough to receive the entire expedition. It has water communication with the Charles on and Savannah Railroad. Beaufort, the village which lies on the west side of Port Royal, is fifty miles northeast of Savannah, and seventy-five miles southwest of Charleston. It lies sixteen miles from the sea, and is guarded and made of little importance by a fort which prevents the admission of vessels over eleven feet draught. The harbor, however, has plenty of water for the Great Republic, or for a seventy-four gunship.

AMERICAN WOMEN. - In Bentley's Magazine for AMERICAN WOMEN.—In Defluey 8 magazine for September, we find an article on American women, from a contributor who signs himself M. Kohle. He professes to have spent some time in this country. He represents our married men as complete slaves to their wives. He says "if a lovely American girl sinks into the same of a man to be bound to him for life she arms of a man, to be bound to him for life, she does so much in the same way as she throws herself into her easy chair. Marriage is her pillow, her sofa, on which she intends henceforth. forth comfortably to repose." He is horrified at the idea that even the Senators at Washington do their own marketing.
