THE BATTLE OF WEBB'S CROSS ROADS .- The lace where Gen. Zollicoffer was defeated and killed, is known through southern Kentucky as Webb's Cross Roads, and the battle should be called by that name. Mill Springs is nearly ten miles distant, and on the other side of the Cumberland river. A part of the engagement took place in a field known in the neighborhood as " the Old Fie d," and I ence the suggestion that the battle should be called the battle of Old Fields. The official statement made by Gen. Thomas that one hundred and fourteen rebeis had been buried, up to a certain hour, has led the public, prone to expect exaggeration, to believe that the figure represented the extent of the teamer Argus has been placed at the mouth of loss of the enemy in killed. We are, however, assured from sources that we believe entirely reliable, that not less tuan three hundred reb els were left dead on the ground. The official report of Gen. Schoepf's Brigade Surgeon states that one hundred and ninety dead rebels were buried on Monday. A gentleman of this city writes that two hundred and eighty-three dead bodies of rebels were found. Another who was on the ground, informs us that he count deighty-five dead rebels in the old field, and that they were lying thick in the undercrush in every direction. We are convinced that the rebel loss in killed was very nearly if not altogether three hundred. Various statements are made of the number of horses and mules taken. The evidence is that at least fitteen hunared fell into our hands.—Cincinnati Commercial.

There was continued activity in all departnents of the Portsmouth Dock Yard. The United States gunboat Tuscarora, and the rebel steamer Nashville, remained in statu no at Southampton. It was stated that the Tuscarora's movement in leaving her moorings on the 13th, was to prevent the Nashville from getting under way for twenty-four hours. It was understood that the Tuscaroras' orders were never to lose sight of the Nashville, to blockade her in Southampton, and if she should leave, to chase her as long as she is at sea.

Additional correspondence has been published in regard to the Trent affair including Earl Russell's reply to Mr. Seward's despatch, dated January 11. It expresses much satisfaction at the conclusion arrived at by the Washington Government, which it considers most favor able to the maintenance of the most friendly relations. The English government, however differ from Mr. Seward in some of his conclusions; and as it may head to a better undertanding in several points of international law, Earl Rusael proposes in a few days to write another despacth on the subject.
