Reliable information leads to the belief that they are falling and may possibly be used as influence against and in extreme cases in the regular service the rebels themselves With the failure of the controlled by the brevette of merit. rebel army on the Potomac, also fails the rebeligh, with all the magnificent schemes and calculations of the rebel leaders. Their plan; the volunteer ranks, to the effect, that in any before the disastrous battle of Bull Run, was the case of a vacancy, promotion should be made eventual occupation of Washington city, and from the ranks. It is useless to declare that the establishment of the rebel government in if the power to fill these vacancies is taken that capital. Had a movement been made on from the men, and changed from that of a Washington city in April or May last, its capture would have been immediate and certain. But with all their boasting, the rebel leaders will be blessed with little recognition, and, lacked the courage to carry out their plans .-They cannot plead a want of knowledge of the defenceless condition of Washington, because the city was then full of spies, constantly engaged in transmitting information to Beauregard, so that the advance on Bull Run by our troops was known at Manassas long before the rear column reached the rebel outposts. Then Washington city was at the mercy of Jeff. Davis, but his coward heart shrank from the work of its capture and destruction. He of Maryland, but they failed to answer his anticipations from like causes which deterred him from marching on Washington; and now, therefore, the rebel army of the Potomac has proven an entire failure. It has accomplished nothing, and failed in all its undertakings. The mere blockade of the Potomac neither gave the rebelief and or strong thened their postion It assisted to increase their burdens by aug-menting the expenses of their army. On the other hand, the Federal troops on the Potomac protection of the capitol by preventing the rebels from accomplishing all they had so sauguinely contemplated for the destruction of is now almost completely enclosed by General McClellan. Manassas is literally besieged, so that the rebels are now put to their wits to prepare for its abandonment instead of its defence. feared by the loyal men of the land. Since we wrote the foregoing, the telegraph has announced the cheering and glorious news that "Manassas is in the possession of the federal troops !" This result was not achieved after a hard fought battle; not won by the loss of thousands of gallant men, but taken possession of by our troops, without firing a gun or pointing a bayonette, the rebels having evacuated their own works, to fly inglorlously at the first approach of our troops. And we venture the assertion here, that an examination will prove in this instance, as it did at Bowling Green. that the rebels were never in superior force, and that they held their ground by a systematic exaggeration of their numbers. Their inglorious flight fixes, forever the ignominy of the southern rebel character as cowardly and treasonable ! We direct the attention of the reader to the details of this news in another column

On the subject of the vacancies that will occur in the army, by the casualties of battle, the ravages of disease, and resignations induced by private causes, we are of this clear opinion, that they should be filled by the choic and preference of the men whose lives and actions are to be given up to the disposal of such commands. There was another inducement held out to the thousands of gallant men who enlisted in franchise to a prerogative, the men in the ranks from which promotion should be made, however gallant the service they may render, the machinery of politics and the exclusive manner in which political patronage is conferred, will soon mark their distinctions in the army, and soon, for opinion's sake, those who really have merit, will be refused recognition, while those utterly deficient, will be elevated and patronised. And when such is condition of affairs arrive, our victories will be less effective and brilliant, because, however much you may appeal to the patriotism of men, and seek hoped the work would be accomplished to impress them with the noble idea of devotion by the ruffianism of Baltimore and the traitors to the general cause, when you become guilty of acts of personal injustice towards them, and betray the saired trust which they reposed in the state, the cause in which they fight soon becomes identified with this distrust and injustice, and soon partakes of their disgrace and repugnance.
