LECTURE ON EGYPT .- On Tuesday evening honor of the Penusylvania volunteers. It last, Hon. William H. Armstrong, Representaprovides that the Executive shall appoint "some tive from Lycoming county, delivered a lecture on Egypt, at the special request of his colleagues, the Governor and the Heads of the Departments. We postponed writing out the iction, upon which shall be inscribed the name few notes we had penciled while listening to the lecture, in hope that space would be afforded us for a liberal notice of the effort. but during the present war, and who has honorably as that hope has been dispelled by the crowded fred therein, and has fallen in battle, or died condition of our columns, we must content hospital, military prison, upon the field, or ourselves with such reference as our limits will home, or in transit to or from his or their permit. Mr. Armstrong has travelled extenomes, from wounds received in battle, disease sively in Egypt, and therefore discussed a mutracied in the service, or from other casual- theme with which he was acquainted, at least iles re ulting from connection therewith, &c., so far as acquaintance with a people can be ith such other particulars as may be accessible, had, by straying among their tombs, wandera ling over their deserts, or standing in wonder before the endurance of their architectural deflorts in the shape of the pyramids. To talk efforts in the shape of the pyramids. To talk of Egypt means much more than most people can comprehend. It may perhaps lead the talker and listener far down the centuries of time, when the world was young, when art was assuming its first shapes of beauty and grandeur, and when science was first pluming her wings for trial and triumph. Egypt bears a relation to all ages of the world. Once the seat of power and the home of wealth, with the world for its conquests and all nations for its votaries, the Pharoabs had little to do but to reign in glory and greatness. Mr. Armstrong delighted his hearers with the illustration of such thoughts, while he traced down Egyptian history to the present insignificant condition of that people among the governments of the world, with a faithfulness which showed that, while he had traversed many miles to behold the faded glory and withered beauty of the land, he had that scholarly acquaintance with his subject which could only be derived by a close study of his-tory. The lecturer granhically described the seat only over the present tory. The lecturer granhically described the seat of powers and the subject which as tory. THE FINE WEATHER yesterday brought out some very sensible changes in the ladies' dress. We no longer see so many heavy furs, and the odd-show jackets, the very latest style, are becoming numerous. In Philadelphia and New York these curtailed garments are all the rage. They are certainly more comfurtable than the absurdly long robes that have been worn, though they make the ladies look as if they had met with the the accident that befell Gretchen, when she dropped asleep in the corn field, and waked to find her dress cut off by some passing rogue to such a scantiness as so if she thought she was really Gretchen.
