Mr. Dunn (Ind.) was glad to hear Mr. Olin's suggestion. The subject of confiscating rebel property was one of the most difficult questions efore Congress, and on its decision was involved the restoration of the government to its former old age down to innocent childhood.

Mr. Oun replied that the House did not require a lecture of the subject. It was clear that there was a contracity of opinion relative to the question of confiscation. He voted to-day to lay the bill on the table, not because a bill for LATER FROM EUROPE. lay the bill on the table, not because a bill this purpose was not proper, but because he could find no warrant in the Constitution for the power which by it was sought to be exer-
