HARRISBURG, PA.

Saturday Afternoon, June 14, 1862.

THE OLD BRECKINEIDGE LEADERS AND ORGANS, the real authors and abetters of this rebellion, change their blandest cries to suit their treasonable purposes. Yesterday they gave sympathy to traitors by guaranteeing to them the protection of a Constitution and laws which federal army to lay down their arms, and by also urging the tax payers to refuse the support of the government. What is this but treason course of the Patriot during this entire struggle. Nor has it stopped at these attempts to arouse the resistance of its own poor followers. Its unfortunate reference to the action of Napoleon the fact that Napoleon had issued a proclamation offering certain refractory loyalists, "annesty for the past and protection for the future," that Abraham Lincoln, in a proclamation issued immediately after his inauguration, offered the rebels terms of peace and protection, if they returned to their allegiance in a certain time. To mention this fact, would have been to sustain the truth of history, and such a course is opposed to the action of locofocoism. But the President did issue such a proclamation, and such partisans as those who control the Breckinridge organs of the Patriot ilk, ridiculed its force and appropriateness. The dough-faces of the north made use of that proclamation to verify the assurances which they had given the southern Democracy, that resistance to Lincoln would secure the overthrow of the government and the consequent triumph of the rebellion. It was thus that the war was prolonged, prolonged on the representation of the Democratic party of the north, that a majority of the people of the free states would take up arms at a given signal, and aid the south in any attempt it might make to overthrow the national government. Had this not been the case, the rebellion would never have been precipitated. Had not just such charlatans as those who control the Patriot pledged the assistance of the Breckenridge faction, treason would to-day have been confined to the petty boastings of the fire-eaters. And yet we hear these men daily talking about prolonging the war. The people are insulted by appeals on the subject of a taxation which grew out of the necessities of Democratic corruption. We submit, whether such audacity does not exceed the treason of the dough-faces.

THE REBEL NAVY has been annihilated. The places that knew it know it no more. In the words of the Ethiopic Psalmist: it "came like the sparrowgrass, it went like the hoppergrass." Its career was brief and tragic. It hardly amounted to a decent parody on Naval prowess. It never won a victory, and never performed an achievement sufficient to redeem itself from contempt. The world never witnessed a more sorry failure. The only apology people, before the summer is over, will be fearfor a navy now possessed by the rebels, is Commodore Hollin's fleet of three vesselsthe Ponchartrain; the Lady Pope and the Unknown, and four or five transports. Even these have been reported to have been run will soon be cared for by our Flotilla.

A VINDICATION.

Major-General M'Clellan, in a despatch dated he 1st instant, alluded to General Casey's Division as having behaved in a manner discreditable to themselves and dangerous to the country. The preferment of such a charge, filled the country with indignation, and at the time we felt that our good old Commonwealth was disgraced, because we understood that Gen. Casey's Division contained a Pennsylvania brigade. It seems now that General M'Clellan was mistaken, and that he was misinformed.-We will not insist that a Commanding General should not make mistakes of this character, involving the reputation of our soldiers at home and the fair fame of the army abroad, but we THE PEOPLE OF PENNSYLVANIA, who have a right to insist that those in anthority TRADE REVIVING. desire cordially to unite in sustaining the NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION in its patriotic place upon the record charges applicant to dis-

He has appealed to the good citizens of St. Louis to aid the sufferers by contributions of food, and a vessel will be immediately dispatched up the Tennessee, ladened with provisions. A year ago, from the Gulf to the mountains of Tennessee, those then haughty people were exulting over the prospective starvation of the people of the North. The intelligence that our factories had been closed, and that women and children in our great cities were begging for bread, was received by them with fiendish shouts.

They drew the wrath of Heaven upon their own heads, and they are now suffering the miseries they invoked upon their innocent countrymen of the North. Let this war be prolonged or brief, the greater portion of the South cannot be spared from famine. The people are
