We have had quite a spirited fight here, and torought him away with him. He keeps and brought him away. So for the General has indulged his whim as a reward for his is back of us from which they shell our camps continually, killing or wounding three or four mea every day. We put up during the night reast to silence it. It was resolved on Sunday last to try and take the place by assault. Stevens, (General) was to assault the work on the right with a strong storning column; Wright and Williams were to advance on the left, prevent reinforcements being advanced, and support Stevens. The attack was to be made about half-past three o'clock. At three on Monday morning Gen. Benham and Staff took a cup of coffee and some crackers, and off we stated.
