The steamer Roanoke from New Orleans on the 12th, arrived last night. Gen. Shepley had received his appointment as Military Governor of Louisiana.

Hon. Reverdy Johnson had arrived. Two young New Orleans ladies had presented the 13th Connecticut regiment with a beautiful United States flag.

The arrival of 3,000 barrels of flour by the Roanoke, induced General Butler to order the price of flour to be reduced to twenty-four dollars per barrel. It had reached thirty-eight and forty dollars. George Copple having been recognized British Vice Consul by Lord Lyons, and apologized to General Batter for the offensive expression in his letter of the 14th of June, had been acknowledged by Gen. Butler as the representative of Great Britain. Army clothing, &c., for five regiments of Louisianans had reached New Orleans per the gation. The Generals, who were accompanied by portions of their staff, report the army in excellent health and spirits. They ridicule the steamer Fulton, and the organization commenced with the prospect of success. Captain Mager's company of Cavalry had broken up the rebel camp at Omitt Bridge.

They killed and wounded several rebels, and brought eight prisoners and a lot of horses. arms, stores, &c., to Baton Rouge. The British gunboats Renald and Landrail had left New Orleans. The bombardment of Galveston had not commenced.

The British brig Richard O'Brien, from Kingston with contraband stores, was burned by the boats crews from the Rhode Island in the harbor, on the 4th. The boats crews furwho went to meet Gen. Hill for the purpose of general impression was that they would sucther celebrated the 4th by and stripes on Texas soil.

The parties on board exhibited counterfeit passports, and endeavored to pass themselves off as Confederates. Both of them brought between twenty and thirty thousand pairs of cot-ton cards, the balance of their cargo being composed of boots, shoes, and other much needed articles in the South. The authorities, however, were too quick for them, and the military commander of the post seized the vessels, put the parties on board in prison, put up the go at auction, and turned over the proceeds to the Confederate Treasury. Two steamers of a sim-ilar character being reported below at the mouth of the Ouchita river, an expedition, consisting of a detachment of four hundred men, was sent off to reize these also.
