Correspondence of the Telegraph. 46th. Reo't. P. V., NEAR CULPEPER, VA.,

Tuesday evening, July 22, 1862.

Mr. Editor:—So rapid have been our movements of late, and so constantly have we been on the march, that I have been unable to write be lion, till, like the ancient temple of Jerusa-earlier, and will therefore briefly relate our progress during the past few weeks.

On Sunday morning, July 6th, the command of Gen. Banks left their camps in the vicinity of Front Royal and moved towards Warrenton, arriving there after very tedious marches on Friday evening, July 11th. The heat, which during our march was exceedingly oppressive, rendered our progress very slow, and during an experience of over fourteen months in the service, I have never seen men so completely worn out-strong, robust systems, incred to hardship and farigue, so utterly prostrated.

Locating our camp about three miles from the town, we were soon snugly ensconced in our tente, and made every preparation for a sea son of rest, but were not destined long to enjoy On Monday afternoon, in connection with the New York 28th, we received orders to join General Hatch's Cavalry Brigade at Culpeper, and starting about 6 o'clock passed through the presty little village of Warrenton just before dusk. In all our wanderings through the States. we have never yet seen a place in which th private residences were so neatly and tastefully arranged, or surrounded by so many cosy com-forts and conveniences, and the genial glow of a calm summer evening seemed to spread a home-like influence o'er it which gave additional beauty. How mournful that a people so happily and pleasantly situated should have been so misled by the syren songs of ambitious and designing men. Continuing our march, the lengthening shadows of evening dimly fading away, gave us the bright stars, radiantly shining from clear blue sky, and the air being cool and balmy, we moved along in fine spirits. About ten o'clock the fair moon rose beautifully, just navy, whose signal services in the Lower Misas we were passing the famous "White Sulphur sissippi have rendered him so conspicuous, clous baths, shady groves and rustic bowers;—

and the large, airy buildings, which in peaceful times, daily and nightly resounded to the jocund laugh of youth and beauty, or the merits of pleasure "chased the glowing hours" of pleasure "chased the glow
