The Two Last Requisitions.

PENNSYLVANIA'S QUOTA.

On the 7th of July last, a call was made on the State for twenty-one regiments of volunteers. This morning a communication was received from the War Department containing a requisition for the militia of the full quota of the State under the two recent calls, each for 300,000 men. The full quota of this State under these calls will be 92,841 men, less the number furnished by the 15th inst., under the call of 7th July, above mentioned.

WE ARE COMING, FATHER ABRAHAM.

New Song.

The enthusiasm in localities, throughout Pennsylvania, is once more of that character which inspires all who behold it with confidence in the loyalty and martial spirit of the people. Every county or town that sends away its one or more companies, regard their own brave men as the very models of military order and devotion. They leave home accompanied by the blessings and the prayers of their friends, and turning their backs on the scenes of their youth and manhood, these brave men almost become soldiers the moment they are mustered into service. The generous emotion is thus calmed—the manly tear at leaving helpless loved ones is dried—and the spirit of the patriot takes hold of the form of the man, to mould and discipline him almost at once into the steady and undaunted soldier. These are the characteristics that we notice among the men who are hourly pouring into Camp Curtin. They are coming from all quarters—fresh from the newly gathered harvests—out of the workshops—from the counting rooms—away from luxurious ease and pleasure—they are pouring into the state capital like the resistless torrents of the mountain, "leaping and singing" as they rush on. The demonstration is grand in the extreme. The men who form these mighty hosts are superior in every respect. They have less of adventure about them than the first quota of brave, dashing boys who are now in the field, but in lieu of this there is more of steady purpose and stern resolution manifested in their march and their demeanor. The first soldiers who rallied to the call of the government, went to menace and arrest rebellion—these go to meet and crush it out.

Spectacles like that which is presented in these uprisings of the people, will not soon again be afforded for the contemplation of the governments of Europe, and well is it for the potentates of the universe that the vision of their subjects is obscured by the rigor of their rule, or the example of a people thus rising and marching to the preservation of their liberties and nationality, might have an evil influence on the stability and power of every throne in the world. Under any circumstances the great rebellion will result in checking despotism and humbling aristocracy. That it was encouraged in this instance by the aristocracies of the old world, there is no longer any doubt. That it was and is fostered by the principal governments of Europe, we have abundant reason to believe, and therefore let the example of its crushing out go to swell the testimony of man's ability for self government, and stimulate the down-trodden masses of Europe to an effort in their own behalf, to become as we are, great, powerful and free!

—In this spirit and in the words of the new song, the people can enthusiastically exclaim,

We are coming, Father Abraham,
Three hundred thousand more!

BEFORE RICHMOND.

The plan of operations against Richmond is gradually unfolding, and by the acts of the drama that have already been witnessed we may form a reasonable judgment as to those which are to follow. We still remain without any definite information as to the strength of the armies of Gen. M'Clellan and Gen. Pope, but it is estimated that they exceed 100,000 each; and it is believed that they are both intended to operate directly upon Richmond, and at the proper time will constitute one army, directed by one controlling mind. The plan would seem to be that M'Clellan who—in the opinion of the British Army and Navy Gazette, which is high military authority—is in a better position for offensive operations than ever before—together with the James river fleet, will form a powerful left wing, which will gradually close in upon Richmond at its most vulnerable point, while Gen. Pope, after clearing the rebels from his front, will form a right wing, not liable to the obstacles and dangers that necessitated the withdrawal of the old right wing of M'Clellan's army, and will close in upon the rebel army from the north. At the critical moment, either M'Clellan or Pope will advance to the attack of Richmond, and while giving the rebels full occupation, the disengaged wing will attempt to gain an entrance into the city. At the same time, the force under Burnside, known to be at least 20 000 strong, having ascended the York river, it is thought will land at West Point, and marching upon Richmond from that direction, will be prepared to co-operate with either M'Clellan or Pope, as circumstances may suggest. Or, as some suppose, he will co-operate directly with M'Clellan from the direction of Norfolk, by a demonstration upon Petersburg.

The advantages of this plan are that the rebels will either be obliged to weaken their army at Richmond by large detachments thrown out against one or both our advancing columns, which will be cut off or driven back, followed close at their heels by our troops, who will effect a lodgment in Richmond; or they will be forced to draw in all their outlying troops and await the simultaneous attack of our concentrated columns in the city itself. In either case, the probabilities are now greater than ever before that Richmond must fall after a desperate battle, or be evacuated. Of course the success of this comprehensive plan depends greatly upon the numerical force of the armies of the Union, and the complete understanding and cordial co-operation of its Generals. As to the former there can be little doubt that our advancing columns are already, or soon must be, fully adequate to the task required of them; while we are assured of the latter by the patriotism and wisdom of the Generals in command. So far then from being discouraged or alarmed, our people have every reason to await the movements of the two columns which are to decide the fate of Richmond with calm confidence and hopes of assured success. Unless some great misfortune befalls Pope at Gordonsville, the hours of the guilty capital of the rebellious confederacy are numbered, and a blow will fall upon its collected armies, which will break them into scattered bodies of affrighted and disheartened fugitives, and bring close at hand the final restoration of the Union, and the wonted supremacy of the Constitution and laws.

SECTIONALISM.

It has been a favorable cry with those who are leading in the great slave-holders' rebellion, and those who sympathise with its enormities, that the sectionalism of the north gave the first incentive to treason in the south, and that the election of Mr. Lincoln was the culminating point from which sprung rebellion. Virginia and other states went out of the Union on the plea that the northern states voted for a sectional President. Is this so? Let the following statement of facts and figures answer:

P-nnsylvania gave	207,812,	against Lincoln.
New York	"	303 327,	" "
Ohio	"	210,331,	" "
Illinois	"	167,332,	" "
Virginia	"	165,249,	" "

Virginia was the fifth state in the Union in the number of her votes cast against Mr. Lincoln. Four northern states gave more votes against Mr. Lincoln than were cast against him, in the Old Dominion. New York almost doubled, Ohio and Pennsylvania were far ahead while young Illinois left Virginia far in the rear, in the opposition to Mr. Lincoln. Yet with these facts and figures plainly before the eyes of all men, and within the comprehension of the dullest observer, that portion of the Democratic party north, who persist in sympathising with the traitors, also insist that Mr. Lincoln was elected President as a sectional candidate, and that the people of the south were therefore justified in rebellion.

But let us come to other facts, irrefutable and sound, to show the fallacy of this cry of sectionalism. Four northern states gave more votes against Mr. Lincoln than were cast in opposition to him in all the ten seceded southern states. The free states gave a quarter of a million more votes against Mr. Lincoln than all the southern states. In the face of these historical facts, the conspirators have the audacity to make the election of Abraham Lincoln the excuse for their hellish war.

All men of common sense will conclude that if the south had been able to produce a true reason for the war, they would not have resorted to falsehood; yet they have not, in a single instance, given a true statement of their reasons for attempting to destroy the government. Jefferson Davis, in every word he has uttered on this subject, falsifies the history of the country, and if a man pretending to be a President fills an address with deliberate lies, we need not expect truth from his sympathisers. Mr. Lincoln was fairly and constitutionally elected. The states casting their votes for him were divided about as usual on other elections. The charge of his vote being a sectional one is a falsehood. Those who make it are tyrants and unwilling that a majority shall govern. Those conspirators at one time professed a great veneration for the decisions of the United States Court. This they would abide by if they could be believed; but there was no truth in their professions. When the United States Court decided that Mr. Lincoln was fairly and constitutionally elected, the rebels deserted that body, and now they never mention this branch of the government. A majority of the members of that court were southern men; yet with one exception, (Mr. Campbell, and he resigned under protest,) they stood by the government. They declared its rightful authority, its constitutionality and its power. They hold their offices and do their duties under our government, and receive their salaries from it. The traitors who applauded the United States Court so highly in the Dred Scott case have all at once lost their veneration for the institution.

After these facts and arguments let us hear no more about sectionalism as the cause of this war. Let the cause go with its object, as they are one in the institution of slavery. For the purpose of strengthening that institution, the south has been alone induced to remain in the Union. It was for this purpose that Mr. Calhoun consented to occupy a seat in the United States Senate. He was there under a protest. He was there positively only to guard the interests and the influence of slavery. All other considerations become insignificant when compared to this idea, and to this, the sectionalism of slavery, we have a right, in reason and truth, to charge all the ills, the bloodshed, and the rebellion that now curse the country.

BLOOD WILL TELL in man, beast or coward, and this was never more practically illustrated than in the action of a certain relative of a former Pennsylvania U. S. Senator. This young man may deem himself secure in his own secret, but we are after him with a sharp stick, so that the next effort he makes with his pen, let him immagine that we are by his side, making a note of his treasonable and slanderous attacks on his country and his countrymen. We content ourselves with this warning for the present.

LIGHT BREAKING.

The Albany Evening Journal admonishes the people to be of good cheer, and we think, in reality that the clouds are slowly breaking. We begin to catch here and there glimpses of a brighter day. The government is at last awakening to a realising sense of the desperate nature of the situation, and of the necessity of resorting to desperate means. We have not only the promise but the evidences of a more vigorous policy. No more coquetting with treason; no more apologetic warfare; no more lavender-water campaigning; no more sentimental tittle-tat about "conquering the affections" of the insurgent masses. Henceforth, we are promised that hard blows will be substituted for soft words; that execution will take the place of threats; that treason will be treated as a crime instead of an indiscretion; that the utmost strength of the Government will be brought to bear upon the very brain and life of the great conspiracy.

Evidences of a resolve to inaugurate a vigorous and earnest war are everywhere visible.—The President has given us his word that there is to be no more "fooling" with the rebels. The War Office has been clothing itself with new vigor and new life. Our Generals have been instructed to spend more of their time in fighting the battles of the Union, and less of their time in acting as policemen for rebels.—The eloquent orders of Gen. Pope have inspired the army and the country with new life. Gen. Halleck is rapidly proving himself the right man for the right place.

The effect of these indications of earnestness on the country is magical. The lethargy that pervaded the public heart after the wretched disaster before Richmond, has passed away.—Men are once more active and hopeful. The feeling that the cause of the Union will yet be triumphant is again becoming general. Everywhere—in every city, town and hamlet throughout the loyal states—the masses are responding to the appeal for men. Illinois has already virtually furnished her full quota. So have Maine and Pennsylvania. The other states are, without exception, doing nobly. New York will, it is earnestly hoped, have her proportion nearly or quite furnished before the 18th.

On the whole, the good work, temporarily checked by local disaster, once more "goes bravely on." There will be drawbacks; there will be more reverses; there will be dark days; —but the cause will go onward triumphant over every obstacle.
