To a Quondam Friend.

ritten for the Telegraph.]

Old friend, we two have walked together Through sunny days and stormy weather Till now; and here the bond must part That bound us closely, heart to heart.
Farewell in sorrow! I'm content
To go the way our fathers went.
For all my inmost being holds
The faith that filled their earnest souls.

I look adown the sunny path Where we have walked in hope and faith, But all the beauty and the sheen Grow dim before another scene; For far beyond this later dream The fires of CONCORD brightly gleam, I see the swords at LEXINGTON Flash through the shadows dark and dun, Through woody steep and narrow gorge The hosts appear at VALLEY FORCE. The war songs of those stirring days Sound clearer far than friendship's lays.

Ah me! when all this strife is past In which our troubled lot is cast; When harvest fields shall blossom where The reek of blood now taints the air; The reek of blood now taints the air; When our great deeds of right or wrong Shall be in fable or in song, Perhaps our children, then, shall see Light in what now seems mystery, And reading o'er the solemn page That mars or brightens all this age

Current, and we passed the dead body of a man floating down most horribly burned. We arrently vegetable in its composition, has rived in front of the city about 10 o'clock; imbeen employed with wonderful success for mediately after coming to anchor I gained perdying and wounded soldiers. The surgeons were busily engaged in dressing the wounds of the wounded, and as fast as their wounds would be dressed, they were taken down to the boats > ras intermed that there was a codsiderable body of troops approaching the place. The long roll was immediately beat and the men were marched forth to neet this body of troops, deperal: Williams leading them. They had not got quite to the outskirts of the city before the enemy was seen approaching with the stars and stripes flying, surmounted by a black flag. General Williams asked of the commanding officer the meaning order to black flag, when he was answered by a volley, and General Williams full to make a being shot through liams fell to de no more, being shot through the breast and brain. The action immediately became general, and from accounts of prisoners taken, the rebelstatcked the General with over 9000 men, whilst our whole force numbered less than 3,500 effective men. Our men fought and the gunboats were immediately signalized and the gunboats were immediately signalized irom the top of the state building to open fire and what direction to fire; they immediately answered the signal by a shower of 9 and 11 inch shell; a force of the enemy had taken up a linch shell inch shell; a force of the enemy had taken up a position in a grave yard, for the purpose of out shanking our little band of Spartans, but five of said a very considerable party of the southern chivalry fell to rise no more. They could not stand this kind of fighting, and concluding that discretion was the better part of valor, they fell back. The cowardly scoundrel Breckin-ridge came in with a flag of truce, requesting six hours to bury their dead. Permission was not granted, but our fellows afloat not knowing or caring about what was going on, sent a few content of the southern of the content of the first content of the content of the first content of the first content of the content o they found that the rebels had lelt, leaving all their dead and wounded behind them for our men to care for or to bury. They left on the field 800 dead and wounded men. Amongt the number of wounded left was the rebel Gen eral Lovell, who commanded at New Orleans are considered to our coming up and General Clark. eral Lovell, who commanded at New Orleans previous to our coming up, and General Clark; they will both die. Lovell hed both legs taken off, and Clark had one leg ond half of his side torn away by the explosion of one of our shells. Our men were busy all day in burying the dead; the wounded were all kindly cared for, and sent down to New Orleans to be better cared for, and when fully recovered administer to them the oath of allegiance. Upon the whole, we consider this one of Upon the whole, we consider this one of the most brilliant little achievements of the age, and there is no use in disguising the fact, our western troops cannot be excelled the fact, our western troops cannot be excelled. One instance: at one point of our line, was stationed one section of an Eastern Battery of 8 guns. This Battery was taken by the enemy six times, and each time was recaptured by the Wisconsin boys. The last time it was taken it made the Wisconsin boys wrathy, and they threw away to one side their guns, and with one yell they rushed in and retook them and manned the guns themselves, and they held it.

yell they rushed in and retook them and manned the gins themselves, and they held it.

The gallant and heroic Duncan, (as the New Orleans papers were used to term him,) was also here, but having once previously tasted the quality of our physic, took the precaution and left. They left word that they would pay this place another visit, but I rather think they will be a little more cautious when they come again. If they do come, they know full well we will be here to receive them, and we will be no ways backward in sending amongst them a few of our lamp posts out of, the mouth of Whistling Dick. It was very evident that they had been disoppointed in their calculations. They would not have made the attack as soon as they did, had they not expected to have received the assistance of the rarm. This ruse received the assistance of the rarm.

That mars or brightens all this age,
Their eyes the hand of God may trace
Exatting all the human race,
Then they, perchance, may not condemn
What now your lips are shaped to blame.

The following private letter written by Mr.

Jacob M. Barr to his father in this city, has been kindly furnished us for publication, will be found very interesting.—ED.]

They would not have made the attack as soon as they did, had they not expected to have received the assistance of the ram. This was part of the agreement. The ram was to have been in front of the city, and to have engaged the gunboats laying here, whilst they engaged the land force; but owing to the force of circumstances, the ram could not keep her part of the appointment. I will admit that she tried quite hard, but she did not expect to meet at Baton Rouge a veritable ram in the shape of the gunboat Essex. Immediately after our fleet had came down from Vicksburg, the two rams finding that they could not coax the Arkansas out from under the batteries, they came down the river with the troop to act in consort with them.

The programme was all made out and well arrianged; but there was one act of this play that they holdings, also the dwelling house the attack as soon at the static as soon is string upon our steamers passing up and down the river.
