THE SITUATION.

The reports in reference to the battle of yes glowing with victory, have been some what mise for its humiliation, they could do nothing shorn of their interest, and it now appears that more or less than attempt the maintenance of success could not be claimed by either the federal or rebel forces. Those on the battle field anticipated a terrible encounter this morning. but intelligence from Hagerstown indicates that away their votes in support of this opposition no firing had been heard in that vicinity during the morning.

A rumor reached Hagerstown late this morn ing, that McClellan had granted the rebels an as speedily as the establishment of the fact armistice to bury their dead. If this is correct, that the people of the loyal states are united and the rebels give their dead a decent burial, no battle will be fought to-day, as that time ple of the south are assured of this fact, it will will be required to dispose of their dead, the strengthen what little fealty for the Governnumber having fallen being reported as enor-

It would be an act of justice easily accomplished, if the people see to it hereafter that only those who are friendly to free labor-who are in favor of protecting that labor from all foreign competition, are invested with legislative power.

WHAT WE MUST REMEMBER While we are willing to disregard all political distinctions, and surrender everything that could tend to raise any issue which might in the least embarrass the Government or interfere with the operations of the army, we must all remember that the men who precipitated are the same who now sustain rebellion. The men in Pennsylvania who have put forth State and county tickets in opposition to the Union ticket in the same localities, are opposed as well to the war for the Union itself. If this were those who are endeavoring to sustain the Government? The men of Pennsylvania who are thus uniting in politics, or who are rather postmay be better able to support the issues involving the safety of the Union and the enforcement of the laws. The politicians who array themselves against these men are compelled to the course by motives just the reverse. They seek organization and power, not that they may add to the defence or insure the preservation of the Union-not that they may add to the efforts of the President to inforce the law, -not that they may increase the vigor of the army in its contests to crush rebellion. If such Thursday Afternoon, September 18, 1862. were their object, an organization, such as they have entered into would be unnecessary and un wise. We sugof the Union pay the war debt. This would be with the rebels, as an act of necessary retaliation, long before it was adopted, but finally the Government was driven to the step. We are now at the conclusion of a bounteous harvest, the land teems with plenty, and might it not be well for the Government, without delay, to take the needful steps to secure the continuance of plenty, until at least the prospect of another harvest is secured? We hope at least it will not be disposed to assume respectability until grim necessity drives it into action.
